D. C. to Hold Big Daylight Raid Drill This Morning

Test Will Take Place Between 10 and 11; Traffic Must Stop; Capitol to Participate

New Air-Raid Warden

Second for City

Warning blasts from 38 sirens will be the signal for the metropolitan area of Washington to take cover in its second but most elaborate daytime air-raid drill sometime between 10 and 11 o'clock this morning.

All walks of life, from school children to Supreme Court Justices, will join in the 15-minute test. Businessmen and civilian defense officials alike were optimistic last night that the all-out test would find the city well prepared.

In the downtown area, in all Government agencies, the larger office buildings and apartment houses, building wardens will conduct employes to safety shelters.

Congressmen to Participate

On Capitol Hill, members of the House and Senate and their clerks will leave their offices and go to designated shelter areas in the corridors. And across the plaza, the siren atop the Capitol power plant will send the Supreme Court justices and their aides to the safety zones.

Air raid drills will be observed in all the District schools, where children are to be marched to refuges within the school buildings.

Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer reiterated last night that all vehicular traffic must cease upon the sounding of the alert. Streetcars and buses will come to a halt for the 15-minute period and passengers will not be permitted to leave. Washingtonians who have appointments and must be at certain destinations at the hour stated for the test, should plan to arrive before 10 a. m., he said. Otherwise they must remain indoors during the period the test is taking place.

Motorists Must Alight

Those in automobiles and taxis must alight and seek shelter, he added. The only vehicles permitted to operate will be official cars.

Guards will be on duty at Union Station at all exits, to prevent passengers on arriving trains from leaving until the all-clear is sounded. Vehicular traffic on the terminal

Rationing Cuts 3-Cornered Pants Supply

Are diaper services an essential enterprise? The relationship between baby's three-cornered underwear and the exigencies of national defense might seem, on first glance, to be in the distaff department. A close look, however, shows that priorities and rationing have caught the industry with its dydies down.

Harper L. Schimpss, one of the partners in the District's largest baby laundry, finds that the Defense Transportation Commission order, limiting retail deliveries to 75 per cent of corresponding months in 1941, may mean that 25 per cent of his customers will not be served.

Anxious mothers, many of them in Washington to work for a defense industry, plead to Schimpss that they have neither the equipment nor the time to properly sanitize diapers.

The diaper business, begun here nine years ago, has gone a long way in a short time. Originally, Schimpss and his partner, John K. Jones, made deliveries themselves, limiting their trade to apartment houses. As the town grew, so grew the dydie service, until now the firm handles 27,000 dydies daily and provides them for five of the city's eight hospitals.

Since the defense boom here, the output has increased from 18,000 daily, about a year ago, to the current mountain of diapers. So great has been the change that the plant now works on double shifts.

With the advent of rationing, however, Schimpss and Jones discovered that no more tires were available for their fleet of trucks because their service is regarded as "not essential." Parts for machinery also have become impossible to obtain.

The limit on mileage has caused the plant to cut out all special services.

Coalition Defeats Gas Hopes

House Rejects Bill, 85 to 125, For Pipeline and Barge Canal

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

The House yesterday unexpectedly rejected legislation for a $144,000,000 pipe line and barge canal across Florida to bring gasoline and oil to the strictly rationed Eastern seaboard.

A bi-partisan coalition of Republicans and Democrats refused to accept the bill as "an urgent war measure" and charged efforts to revive the twice-defeated Florida ship canal project.

Considered under a rules suspension barring amendments but requiring a two-thirds vote for passage, the 85 to 125 standing vote fell short of even a majority.

Bill Dead, Mansfield Says

Chairman Mansfield of the House Rivers and Harbors Committee, who vainly sought to persuade members that the old ship canal project was not involved, later told reporters that the bill was "dead."

Subsequently Mansfield conferred with leaders and there were intimations that the legislation after a cooling off period may again be considered under the regular rules of the House, requiring only a majority for approval. This would open the bill to amendments.

Senator Vandenberg (Republican) of Michigan, who led the successful fight against the original Florida ship canal, and likewise opposed the barge project, conferred with several members of the Republican minority before the vote.

Florida Delegation Split

The Republican opposition vote was almost solid and Democrats divided, with the Florida delegation itself split two ways. The overnight opposition caught leaders by surprise. Speaker Rayburn took the floor in support of the measure, asking Mansfield: "Can the gentleman think of a single act of Congress that would be more in the interest of national defense at this time?" Mansfield said nothing else could bring oil to the East as quickly.

7-Foot Canal Exists

Majority Leader McCormack also vainly argued that the project was of paramount importance, providing a pipeline that could be built on

New Bedford Strikers Face U. S. Blacklist

WLB May Urge Drastic Action Unless Textile Workers Return

By Alfred Friendly
Post Staff Writer

The War Labor Board, determined to smash the most obdurate strike since the declaration of war, may call today for the blacklisting of 156 striking New Bedford, Mass., textile workers from all future war employment unless the walkout is ended at once.

The drastic step paralleling action taken in World War I against Bridgeport, Conn., munitions workers, may be recommended to the White House, along with suggestions that the Selective Service System draft all strikers eligible for military service who have hitherto enjoyed occupational deferments.

The week-old strike, conducted by A. F. of L. workers at the Hathaway Manufacturing Co., is listed as first item of business at the board's weekly meeting today. Union representatives on the board are expected to concur in any orders taken against strikers, however harsh, in view of the fact that the strike has been officially outlawed.

Francis J. Gorman, international president of the textile workers, however, has requested the WLB to defer drastic action until the local union, meeting this morning, has a chance to reconsider its position. Gorman is known to have sent union officials to New Bedford to seek to prevail on the men to return to work.

Meantime, the walkout yesterday of A. F. of L. crews and shore em-

Gov. George A. Wilson took an early lead last night for the Republican senatorial nomination in Iowa's primary, while Senator Clyde L. Herring was well ahead for the Democratic nomination.

Lieut. Gov. B. B. Hickenlooper was running strong for the Republican Governorship nomination, while former Gov. Nelsoh G. Kraschel was ahead in the Democratic race to oppose Hickenlooper in the general election.

District Jury Convicts Two Tokyo Agents

Williams and Ryder To Be Sentenced Friday With Townsend

By Dillard Stokes
Post Staff Writer

Two confederates of the Japanese agent, Ralph Townsend, were convicted in the District Court yesterday of criminal conspiracy and violation of the Foreign Agents Act.

Justice T. Alan Goldsborough said he would pronounce sentence Friday.

Frederick Vincent Williams, convicted of conspiracy and nine violations of the Foreign Agents Act, faces a possible penalty of $19,000 fine and 6 2-3 to 20 years in prison. He registered the fact that he was a Japanese agent, but was convicted of concealing his activities.

David Warren Ryder, convicted of conspiracy and of failing to register that he was in Japan's pay, faces a possible penalty of $1000 fine and 16 to 18 months in prison.

Viereck Protests Conviction

Sentenced with the two will be Townsend, whose propaganda service to Japan included writing pamphlets, and editorial work for Scribner's Commentator, the anti-British magazine published at Lake Geneva, Wis. Townsend pleaded guilty to the charge that he violated the Foreign Agents Act.

Also to be sentenced Friday is Tsotomu Obana, the only one of the five Japanese conspirators who was caught by Federal authorities. The others went back to Tokyo long before Special Prosecutors Albert E. Arent and Arthur B. Caldwell started the investigation which led to the convictions yesterday, Obana—whom even the prosecutors said was just a stooge of the big-shot agents who ran the propaganda machine—pleaded guilty, too.

The jury deliberated four hours to convict Ryder and Williams, after a trial that lasted three weeks.

Meanwhile, yesterday another Axis agent, Gorge Sylvester Viereck, was protesting to the United States Court of Appeals here against his sentence of two to six years in prison.

Hearing the Viereck appeal were Chief Justice D. Lawrence Groner and Justices Fred Vinson and Justin Miller.

Citizens' Suggestions Accepted

Van Duzer to Eliminate Chevy Chase Circle Hazards

With only one exception, the director of vehicles and traffic agreed yesterday to the recommendations made by the Chevy Chase Citizens association for the reduction of traffic hazards in and about Chevy Chase Circle. According to Frank Buckley, chairman of the committee investigating the traffic conditions at this point, William A. Van Duzer "was very cooperative."

Basing its recommendations upon careful study, the committee requested the changes stipulated in the 18 separate points which appeared in detail in Sunday's Post. The sole exception was the placing of a stoplight at the southern end of Western Avenue.

The meeting was attended by the citizens committee, Director Van Duzer; his assistant, Maurice O. Eldridge; Police Inspector Arthur Miller, in charge of traffic; the parents of Francis Immer, the boy recently killed by a bus at the circle, and their lawyer, Al Kane.

Specifically, Director Van Duzer agreed to place a pipe fence from Patterson Street south to Oliver Street and to have the transit company extend the island, upon which the terminal is located, in order to create a line even with the curbing.

In addition, the island at the south end of Chevy Chase Circle will be extended to the bus terminal. There will be a cut in this island, however, to allow the passage of vehicles at reduced speed. At the island crossing from the west side of Connecticut Avenue to the terminal there will be placed an iron railing to check any haphazard pedestrian crossing.

Transportation Front

The toll taken by Axis submarines in American waters since Pearl Harbor mounted to 234 ships yesterday as the Navy Department announced three new sinkings.

A medium-sized United States merchant ship was torpedoed in the Atlantic, with a survivors landing at an East Coast port, the Navy announced late in the day after previously telling of a small British ship being lost in the Atlantic and a small Brazilian vessel being sent to the bottom near Haiti.

The British vessel was torpedoed and sunk off the North Atlantic coast more than a week ago.

The Third Naval District in New York said that one of the crew of 40 had been killed by the torpedo explosion in the engine room.

After the three life boats had moved a few hundred yards away from the stricken boat, the submarine surfaced and fired several rounds from a deck gun into the cargo vessel.

The submarine came alongside the life boats and the survivors were given two bottles of West Indian rum.

Argentina Now Agrees Nazis Torpedoed Tanker

Buenos Aires, June 1 (AP).—A high government source said tonight that Argentine officials had confirmed the United States Navy's report that the 12,500-ton Argentine tanker Victoria was damaged by a submarine off Cape Hatteras last April and a quiek protest from this neutral government to the Axis was expected.

It would be the second protest to the Axis. The first was in 1940, when the freighter Uruguay was lost off the Spanish coast. Although Berlin's reply never was made public, congressional sources said Foreign Minister Ruiz Guinazu last year informed the Senate that Germany had promised suitable reparations after the war.

Sub's Officers Laugh At Brazilian Victims

Key West, Fla., June 1 (AP).—Four officers of a submarine, believed Italian, laughed from the conning tower of their vessel recently as they watched members of the crew of a torpedoed Brazilian merchantman struggle in the water near their blazing craft.

Two torpedoes thundered in rapid succession against the ship May 24 near Haiti. Six men died, two of

Cologne's Dead Put at 20,000, With Hordes Fleeing Region; Rommel's Tanks Held in Trap

Nazi African Army's Deputy Commander Shot Down in Plane, Captured by British

By the Associated Press

Cairo, June 1.—The two armored divisions which form the core of Axis forces in Libya are battling to extricate themselves from a British trap southwest of Tobruk, but after more than two days the major part is still held fast by encircling British minefields, artillery and tanks, the British announced today.

A casualty of the battle, fought on a burning field of sand swept by duststorms and littered by dead and the black wrecks of tanks, planes and trucks, was Gen. Ludwig Cruewell, deputy commander of the African corps under Field Marshal Edwin Rommel and the most important German army prisoner to fall into British hands in this war.

Not a Victory Yet

Cruewell told his captors that his pilot mistook British ground troops for Italian allies and started to land his plane. The pilot was killed in a burst of fire from the British and Cruewell said he was barely able to stumble out of the plane after it caught fire.

Since noon of May 30 Rommel's forces have been making violent attempts to hold two gaps for escape through minefields of the 50-mile British line behind which they were caught while Lieut. Gen. Neil M. Ritchie's guns, tanks and planes hammered them from all sides and from the air.

The British, who failed in their objective of destroying Rommel's African corps in their last offensive, were thus presented with a second opportunity as the result of the offensive which the Germans started six days ago.

They were not ready to claim a victory, for they remembered that the slippery Rommel neatly escaped their traps before, but they were confident his drive no longer threatened Tobruk.

R. A. F. Pounds Foe Hard

The "battle of the gaps," on which depended Rommel's fate, centered upon two narrow lanes, 15 miles apart, through the British line running inland from Ain el Gazala, on the coast, to Bir Hacheim.

The Germans, concentrating large numbers of antitank guns in these gaps, had held them open despite hard British attacks.

The main German forces swept around the south end of the line toward Tobruk Tuesday night. Then, when the R. A. F. and mobile units swarmed upon their supply columns, they attempted to withdraw

How Wimpy, A Bomber, Came Home

By Drew Middleton
Associated Press Staff Writer

With the R. A. F. Bomber Command, June 1.—This is the story of a little Polish pilot hero and his British plane or what's left of it.

The Pole, with four other members of his crew wounded and unconscious, brought back his shattered Wellington "Wimpy" from the 4-figure Cologne raid.

The plane is in the repair shop and they're trying to figure out how it got home without a landing gear and with bomb doors still open.

"Wimpy" squatted in the bangar in battered glory. Her interior was caked with blood, great tufts of grass clung to her scarred belly from her pancake landing and there was a hole in her fuselage the size of home plate. But she's there.

In the rear gun-turret there was a hole you could put your foot through. A cannon shell from a Nazi night fighter had taken off the rear gunner's foot. But he managed to keep alive and, with tracer bullets streaming at him, he managed to return the fire.

There were 17 bullets holes in the front turret, six separate cannon shell holes in the underside of the fuselage.

The Polish pilot grinned when I asked him about it.

"I don't speak much English," he said. "But these men are so good. When they are hit they keep still. When I tell them I will get them back one of them says 'Hear, hear' just like they do at public speakings.

"We get home all right but I cannot get my wheels down to land. I got over the airfield once, twice; and I hear them groaning back there.

"Then I say 'Okay Butch' and I bring her in. God He is at our right hand, I know."

Nazis Shoot 27 More Czechs; Toll Now 109

Many Germans Seized For Plot on Heydrich's Life, Swedes Report

By the Associated Press

London, June 1.—The Prague radio tonight announced the execution of 27 more Czechs, including four women, in connection with the attempted assassination of Reinhard Heydrich, Gestapo leader.

This brought the total to 109 since the attack on Heydrich last Wednesday.

Among today's victims were the well-known novelist, Vladislav Vancura, a 74-year-old woman and two university professors. Eighteen of today's executions were at Prague, nine at Brunn.

Reports from Stockholm, unconfirmed but termed "likely" by informed London source, said "several scores" of Germans, including Catholics and former members of the Stahlhelm, had been arrested in Germany in the aftermath of the attempted assassination of Heydrich.

Among many persons reported seized by the Nazis in Berlin were said to be men who had been ac-

Windsor Hastily Called to Nassau

The Duke of Windsor, who arrived here only yesterday for a round of conferences on economic conditions in the West Indies, has arranged to return at once to Nassau on urgent business, it was announced early today.

The British Press Service here said it had no details of the circumstances requiring his presence. A member of the Duke's party said he understood there had been "some sort of labor disturbance" at Nassau.

Fort Knox, Ky., June 1.—Less than 2 years old, the Armored Force is the Army's lustiest infant, a youngster with steel for its teething ring.

In those two years the Armored Force has grown outrageously, doubling and quadrupling in size and muscle and feeding, all too often, on promises. From one infantry tank regiment and a few scattered cavalry squadrons and division tank companies have sprung the Army's present eight armored divisions and 16 tank battalions, trained, fit and full of fight.

If their training has lagged, if well-trained outfits have been pulled back to start all over again from time to time, the trouble has been America's failure to provide them with the machines they need to fight their style of battle. The Armored Force has pulled itself to its present stature by its own bootstraps.

ANDREWS

It pulled itself a long way. Its soldiers in the field have their tanks and half-tracks and guns; its recruits in the Armored Force Replacement Training Center here have theirs, or excellent substitutes for them, and Armored Force equipment is rolling off the assembly lines now at a rate to curl your hair.

You have seen how the Armored Force made two divisions with the equipment of one at Camp Polk, La. At Fort Knox you see how it makes all the expert specialists a tank outfit needs and makes them of the rawest sort of material with equipment borrowed, salvaged or improvised.

And they're doing something else here which is another ex-

New York, June 1.—Some time in June—possibly even as late as July—Adolf Hitler plans to give the command for a general offensive on the entire Russian front.

More than that, he hopes to march through Turkey and Iran in order to execute one of his famous pincers movements.

This information came to me on the last day of my stay in Lisbon from a German source so well in the know of things that I cannot doubt its veracity.

The recent seesaw struggle on the southern Russian front, my informant pointed out, is merely a preparatory action, a cleaning of the boards for the major action that is impending.

Unless the United Nations spoil Hitler's game by really erecting a second front in the west quickly and efficiently, thereby compelling Hitler to take large contingents of his troops and his air force away from Russia, this is what is scheduled to happen:

The German dictator intends to "finish" Russia by a dramatic general assault along the whole line from every possible angle. He is willing to put all his eggs in one

Army Called In

By the Associated Press

New York, June 1.—The mass British air-raid on Cologne killed "in the neighborhood of 20,000" persons and injured another 54,000, the New York Times said tonight in reporting "private advices from competent neutral observers in Berlin."

Special detachments of sanitary forces of the German army have been sent to the Rhineland city, the paper declared, to aid municipal officials in preventing spread of disease in the present warm weather.

Three-fifths of the approximately 800,000 residents of Cologne are being evacuated to the Munich area to be housed in emergency barracks erected in the last 24 hours, the paper said.

In addition and despite official orders against traveling the populations of other Rhineland cities, including Aachen, Duesseldorf, Wuppertal and Mainz, have begun mass migration to avoid future bombardments, the Times asserted.

The Times said that "confirmation has been received" that the world-famous cathedral at Cologne was not damaged in the rain of bombs. (The casualty figures differed greatly from official German reports which said that 139 civilians had been killed.)

The Times said its confirmation had been relayed from Europe Monday night.

British Planes Batter 400-Mile 'Invasion Path'

London (Tuesday), June 2 (AP).—British bombers sprayed explosives over a 400-mile "invasion path" on the continent all day yesterday as the United States Air Force chief, Lieut. Gen. Henry H. Scores of Hurricane and Boston bombers accompanied by Spitfire fighters smashed at German-held docks and factories all the way from Holland to Cherbourg, losing nine planes to the Nazis' two, a British

Navy Casualties Exceed 8500

The Navy Department announced its fourth casualty list of the war yesterday, raising the total of dead, wounded and missing to more than 8500 officers and men.

The new list, covering the period April 16 to May 10, inclusive, added the names of 64 dead, 54 wounded and 2193 missing.

In the first three casualty lists the Navy had reported 2991 dead, 2495 missing and 907 wounded. The latest accounting included the names of some missing or dead who previously had been reported wounded.

Swedish Liner Brings 908 To America; 3 U-Boats Shadowed Her En Route

Admiral Leahy Among Envoys Brought Home

By the Associated Press

Jersey City, N. J., June 1.—Grimy white in the rain, the Swedish diplomatic exchange liner Drottningholm, last safe boat from Europe, came up the bay to its pier today with 908 Americans, Latin Americans, quasi-Americans and immigrants after a safe but exhausting ten-day trip from the enemy-controlled continent.

She was shadowed by at least three U-boats, all of which vanished correctly after viewing her unmistakable colors and floodlit "diplomatic" markings. Most of her tired, nervous human cargo was ill on a calm sea before the gangplank came down this morning to disembark diplomats, old and young men and women, dogs, pet turtles and even two captive crickets.

For an hour and a half after the Drottningholm had tied up, the passengers crowding the decks and the anxious hundreds on the pier waited in a dramatic, hushed tension.

Then a black-shrouded casket bearing the body of Mrs. William D. Leahy, wife of the Ambassador to France, was lowered to the pier, where a Navy honor guard covered it with the Stars and Stripes. Mrs. Leahy died in Vichy, France.

Admiral Leahy Silent

Preceded by several naval officers, Admiral Leahy, gray and lonely, walked quickly down the gangway and entered one of several cars en route to a Washington train. He made no statement.

The Drottningholm brought from Lisbon 573 United States citizens, including 169 diplomats. There were 185 diplomats from Latin America. Nationals of 33 countries were aboard, plus 19 stateless persons. There were 38 straight immigration cases and several dozens of Polish and Czech speaking passengers with somewhat remote claims to United States citizenship.

Authorities said these later persons were gathered up and delivered to the Portuguese by the Germans because Hitler wants to exchange them and others like them for about 4000 Germans in America whom he considers "important" to the German war effort.

However, some United States authorities believed that one more voyage by the Drottningholm would return almost all the legitimate Americans who still want to come home. The ship is due to return to Lisbon this week, for a second round trip.

Appalling Hunger on Continent

Meanwhile, immigration authorities were busy far into this afternoon aboard the ship, coping with the entry problem.

The American diplomats aboard the boat spoke guardedly, if at all, of the conditions in the countries in which they had been interned. But the unofficial passengers told of appalling hunger on the continent, especially in Greece.

There were varied accounts of the state of German morale, and of German treatment of American internees as well. Some of those sent to the little known concentration camp in an ancient stone castle at Laufen, on the German-Austrian border, said they arrived handcuffed in pairs and confined in railway prison cars.

The first of the three submarines which sighted the Drottningholm looked her over 22 hours out of Lisbon; the others appeared on Friday, May 29. All closed their hatches and dived quickly after establishing the ship's identity, and Capt. Sigfrid Ericsson, master of the Drottningholm, kept the incidents generally quiet lest the passengers become alarmed.

Floating Melting Pot

The Drottningholm was a floating cross-section of melting-pot America. From stuffy D and E decks, where Polish immigrants, U. S. foreign correspondents and minor State Department clerks were jammed, to the top decks accommodating diplomats and State Department officials, newspapermen counted 16 languages spoken, sung or muttered.

Polish-Americans, some of them released suddenly from German internment camps and surprised but happy to find themselves aboard the Drottningholm in Lisbon harbor, sang wild Polish songs nightly on the forward hatch. At meals they went through the regular dinner menu, then ordered the entire a la carte service.

Headed by Admiral Leahy, 17 chiefs of United States and Latin-American diplomatic missions were on the Drottningholm. They included George Wadsworth, former charge d'affairs in Rome; Leland B. Morris, former charge d'affaires in Berlin, and Herbert Pell, former Minister in Budapest, Mrs. Louisa Gunther, widow of the late United States Minister to Rumania, also was aboard.

A majority of warden areas have announced that their sectors are in readiness, and believe their organizations will operate with the maximum of efficiency. While sector wardens are at their places of business, they will not be expected ot rush to their home blocks to take up their duties. basket and concentrate on this one military problem.

Hitler will, as usual, attempt to confound his enemies by surprise—surprise both as to the time of striking and as to new weapons designed during the long winter of comparative inactivity at the front.

"We have a whole new bag of tricks," my informant boasted.

Peace Expected Then

Once Russia is smashed and prostrate—so Hitler still seems to think—the Western world will be grateful to him for having removed the curse of Communism from the earth and will come to terms with him.

But to defeat Russia, he must have the oil of the Caucasus. And he can best take the Caucasus by a pincers movement. In other words one section of his gigantic army must approach the Caucasus by way of Turkey and Iran.

"Iran is practically ours already," my informant said, confidently. "England has had to take most of her troops out of there and hurry them down to India. There isn't any love for the Russian troops stationed there. Germany will be welcomed as a liberator."

fearing that he had probably already gone too far, he would not comment on Turkey. The name of one German person slipped out, however, as booked to leave for Turkey shortly. This man often precedes the troops.

Turk Position in Doubt

Turkey's position has long been a matter of doubt. One must not forget that the German representative in Turkey is wily Ambassador Franz von Papen, for whom diplomatic intrigue is duck soup. Despite innumerable rumors of his early retirement—probably usually started by the Nazis themselves to confound the enemy—"Franzel" Papen has been quietly at work softening up the Turks.

It was interesting for us during our internment at Bad Nauheim to follow the accounts in the daily German press of the trial in Turkey of Von Papen's would-be assassins. It was obvious that the German public was being prepared to realize how Russian agents were trying to undermine the Turkish state and endanger her neutrality.

From this, one may deduce that if Turkey decides to cast her lot with the Axis, the day may come when Turkey will invoke German assistance to "protect" her from bolshevism; if she decides to oppose a German march-through, Foreign Minister von Ribbentrop may some Sunday morning at daybreak in June or July summon the few remaining foreign correspondents in Berlin to the Wilhelmstrasse to inform them that the German army was now on its way through Turkey to save the country from Russian communism, the British Secret Service and "American Jewish intrigue."

It is now almost half a year since we last attended the press conferences in the Wilhelmstrasse. At one of our last meeting there, however, the spokesman was positive in asserting that relations between Turkey and Germany were excellent.

Nazis Active in Greece

The Berlin correspondent for the Turkish News Agency told me shortly before I was interned that he was instructed to comment on the German news "in a family manner." The instructions came from Ankara.

But Germany is taking no chances. One of our repatriates on the Drottningholm who came from Greece reported that Germany was feverishly at work on the Greek islands in the Ionian Sea building barges with which to effect landings in the Dardanelles. Some 4000 German workers, he estimated, were engaged in this construction project, besides all necessary native Greek help.

The port of Piraeus, he also reported, was teeming with activity again, and all sorts of construction was under way. When I visited it, a year ago, following in the wake of the conquering German armies, it was a scene of death and destruction.

The curtain of silence which the Nazis have dropped over Greece is thick and impervious. It is therefore hard to verify this repatriate's story.

It seems decidedly to make sense, however.

communique said.

As the word spread by radio into Europe that "the Yanks are coming," hundreds of great four-motored British bombers were awaiting only good weather and the order "Go to it again!" in their pulverizing smashes at German cities.

In the big daylight sweeps the British attacked docks at Flushing, Brugge, Cherbourg, Boulogne, Dieppa and Abbeville, and a silk factory at Calais which makes parachutes for the German air force.

Hurricane bombers diving at more than 400 miles per hour placed their explosives "smack in the middle of the factory," the air ministry news service said.

A small number of German planes early today hit back at an East Anglian town, starting a few fires in the business district. These were reported quickly controlled.

Thousands Fleeing City

Reports from neutral countries on the continent said that already the homeless by hundreds of thousands were streaming eastward from the Cologne area, away from the whole vulnerable Rhineland.

British airmen returning from reconnaissance flights today said the smoke pall still was so dense over Cologne that they were unable to photograph the results of the raid.

A glimpse of the striking power already built up by the R. A. F. was seen in a disclosure that new crews had received their orders for a second tremendous onslaught last night when bad weather closed in and restricted operations.

Germany cried out for reprisals, but the worst the Luftwaffe was able to deal out last night was a three-wave attack by 25 to 50 planes on the southeastern England cathedral City of Canterbury.

The sharp counterattack against the quiet little town left hundreds homeless and wrecked a number of historic buildings, including some damage to churches, but casualties were described unofficially as light. (The fate of the great cathedral of Canterbury was not disclosed, but the British said it obviously was the target at which the Nazis struck.)

The part of the United States in the forthcoming aerial offensive, which might outweigh even the deluge of six million pounds of explosives the R. A. F. loosed over Cologne, was drawn in plain words by General Arnold.

He said his conferences in London, now nearly completed, had "hastened the day when our air arm shall join in an air offensive against the enemy which he cannot meet, defeat or survive."

Replying to Arnold's congratulations on the Cologne raid, Air Marshal A. T. Harris, chief of the R. A. F. bomber command, said, "We are supremely confident that with their aid our common enemies—faced with certain destruction of their own land—will have cause to bitterly rue the day on which they forced our two countries into war."

Harris said that time was "now so near," and Arnold predicted that the hour of joint offensive would be at hand "very soon."

Informed air observers, noting that three-fourths of Cologne was left ablaze under a three-mile-high pall of smoke, said it would take months to put the great war manufacturing center back into working order.

One authoritative source said Reichsmarshal Goering had put Heinrich Himmler, chief of the Gestapo, in control of air raid precaution services throughout Germany as a result of the raid, thus broadening police control.

"Nightmare," Germans Say

Berlin (From German Broadcasts), June 1 (AP).—The Berlin radio quoted dispatches from Cologne tonight as saying that 139 civilians thus far had died as a result of the British raid, and that "the nightmare of Sunday still is weighing on the Cologne population."

"Far reaching measures were taken for those who have lost their homes," the West Deutsche Beobachter said, "and the homeless are showing much discipline although many have lost their entire property.

Refugees Call Cologne 'Blazing Furnace, a Fearful Sight'

By Drew Middleton
Associated Press Staff Writer

With the R. A. F. Bomber Command, June 1.—"Listen brother, there's not a damned thing left in Cologne."

It was a 21-year-old Texan, "Bud" Cardinal of Fort Worth, speaking and Bud ought to know, for he was one of the first R. A. F. airmen to fly over the now-ruined German Rhineland city in Saturday night's 1250-plane raid.

"You had to line up as though it was a movie," he elaborated. "We went in plane by plane, and when the boys really got swinging you could not see the explosions of the bombs because the fire down there was so big."

Bud, who came out of Texas to join what he called "The Royal Texas Air Force" in Canada, was among the 6000-odd British, Scotish, Australian, Canadian and Barbadoes airmen who wheeled the big bombers over Cologne and its industrial environs.

"Jock," a 19-year-old Scotish veteran—Cologne was his eighteenth big raid—said the huge Hohenzollern burg bridge across the Rhine "must have been blown to bits; nothing could stand in what we gave them."

All the pilots agreed that the R. A. F. tactic of sending in bombers to drop incendiaries first had outlined the targets in flames and made the job easier for those who came later with the 3000 tons of explosive.

"There's a guy named Charlie Honychurch from Brooklyn who was in on the raid," said Cardinal. "He isn't around just now but he says his ship came in slow, let go, then turned off. He said the bursting bombs looked like about a thousand big guns firing."

Cardinal, who was second string guard at Southern Methodist University in 1938-39, took this correspondent over to meet Leonard Johnson, 28, of Corpus Christi, another "Royal Texas" airman—but a disappointed one.

Even before introductions, Johnson said, sourly:

"Don't ask me. I never reached Cologne. One of my motors conked out and I had to turn back. A hell of a note! I've been over five times on big raids, but I missed the brass ring."

"Don't worry, you'll get a crack," Cardinal said.

Johnson brightened and agreed:

"Yeah, we'll be going back, and just as many, if not more."

"Look, you know when Commander Harris said 1000 bombers a night would knock the Germans out of the war," Johnson went on. "Well, tell 'em at home that's right.

"Tell 'em to send some real stuff over here, and we'll knock these Krauts off the map."

"Both Cardinal and Johnson agreed that "the British are good."

"They get you down sometimes because they're so anxious to be correct," said Johnson, "but after the way they organized this raid and carried it out, I take off my hat to them."

Somewhere on the German Front, (Tuesday), June 2.—The first refugees to reach the frontier from the fearful bombing of Cologne described the Rhineland city today as one vast "blazing furnace," with its most vital industrial installations smashed to bits.

But one of those who fled from the scene of devastation reported that Cologne's world famous cathedral had escaped damage as though by a miracle.

Parties Interrupted

Haggard and gaunt, these refugees recited dramtic eyewitness stories of how giant British bombs came tumbling down on Cologne with such startling suddenness that gay parties in honor of a home town U-boat crew on leave were turned within a few moments into panic-stricken scrambles for shelter.

As soon as the bombs stopped falling, many thousands of refugees started a stampede from the Cologne area. One of these was a deckhand on a Rhine River freight boat which had been anchored at the outskirts of the city when the R. A. F. swept overhead.

"In no time at all," he said, "the whole region was a blazing furnace. I saw fire and bombs in the last war, but that was child's play compared with what happened at Cologne. From where my boat was anchored I could see the whole industrial section of the city blanketed by exploding bombs.

"It Was a Fearful Sight"

"Huge cranes were smashed to pieces, storehouses became matchsticks while I watched. The bombs burst squarely in the center of the complex network of freight cars, freight boats, tugs and steamers which line the river and overflow along the artificial harbors on each bank.

"Saturday, this area was a busy hive of industry. After the bombs began to drop from the skies it became just a tangled mass of twisted steel and burning wood. Wreckage was strewn about as if a whirlwind had struck. Bodies were sprawled grotesquely. It was a fearful sight."

Another refugee, a pale, drawn young man in his early twenties, gave a graphic description of how the bursting bombs turned the gaiety of Cologne's cafes to stark terror.

"I was making a tour of the dance halls and cafes not far from the cathedral just before the raid started," he said. "Everybody was gay and happy. The gauleiter had eased the wartime restrictions in honor of a hometown U-boat crew on leave, and there were dozens of parties under way.

"When the sirens began to scream there was a wild rush for safety. But there was not enough room in the air-raid shelters to hold the throngs who tried to find a place of refuge.

"We dashed for the cathedral but the whole region was aflame before we could reach its shelter.

"When the bombing stopped and morning finally came the once-gay row af garish night clubs was a shambles. But the cathedral was unscathed."

and today were 20 miles east of the line and west of the trails crossing at Knightsbridge.

The R. A. F., putting on some of its heaviest blows, continuously bombed, machinegunned and shelled the milling armored forces; ranged on to blast supply and air centers at Martuba; Derna, El Tmimi and Messina in Sicily, and apparently encountered heavier opposition, for it reported the destruction of 19 of its own planes as against 4 of the enemy.

Some mystery still attached to the reasons for Rommel's offensive at the beginning of the hot season. A diary of Gen. Cruewell's, which was found on the 55-year-old commander, disclosed that he had conferred with Adolf Hitler in Germany only a week before the attack. Leaving Africa March 24, he had returned May 24, only two days before the zero hour. His wife died in Germany three weeks ago.

A captured order of the day at the start of the offensive, however, disclosed great confidence on Rommel's part. To his men Rommel declared that Axis superiority in numbers and arms "guarantees you victory."

"Captured Italian officers gave him a most deferential Fascist salute when he departed," said a British officer who escorted Cruewell to quarters assigned to him.

Cruewell appeared much upset over being a prisoner, although he was only one of several hundred including many Italian staff officers.

At the same time, British sources disclosed that Gen. Rommel sought shelter in a British Red Cross station last Friday while his motorized troops were fighting unsuccessmully against a British tank attack.

Rommel came into the dressing station after his troops had taken possession and chatted with soldiers and patients. After four hours he stepped to the door, fired a signal pistol and was picked up by a Fiesler Storch plane. The field hospital was later recaptured by the British.

2 Agents of Japan Are Convicted

Guire, told the court that the Viereck prosecution was an example of Government bureaucracy run riot. Among errors of which he complained was the reading at Viereck's trial of the book "Spreading Germs of Hate," in which the Nazi agent told how he hoodwinked American citizens and Congressmen when he was working for the Kaiser during World War I.

Viereck's counsel contended that as far as the Government evidence showed, the Germans paid Viereck $65,000 in 18 months for serving as an "author and journalist," and ran the propganda machine for nothing.

The justices inquired whether Viereck took the stand to deny the charges, but did not comment when told that he did not.

The chief of the criminal division, Assistant Attorney General Wendell Berge, upheld the conviction as proper. He gave the court a brief outline of Viereck's activities which included running a publishing house, operating magazines, writing speeches for the late Senator Ernest Lundeen (Farmer-Labor) of Minnesota, and contriving to have a large amount of material inserted in the Congressional Record.

Representative Hamilton Fish told his secretary, George Hill, to help Viereck distribute one speech the Nazi agent wrote for the late Senator Lundeen. Following this, Hill supplied Viereck's organization with literally tons of propaganda published in the Government Printing Office, which Viereck's aides mailed out under frank.

Aiding Prosecutor Berge were the men who sent Viereck to jail, William Power Maloney and Edward J. Hickey, jr., now a Navy officer. Berge parried complaints that Maloney was too vigorous in prosecuting Viereck with this comment:

"As chief of the division, I would hardly send the case to a timid man, a man who fought with feathers. . ."

them killed by the explosion and four in the rough sea attempting to reach lifeboats. Forty-five survivors reached land after 29 hours in lifeboats, and were brought to Key West.

The attacking submarine had the head of a long-horned goat painted on its conning tower. In the goat's mouth was a red rose.

"I believe that submarine was Italian," said Chief Engineer Haroldo Nascimento. "Brazil has some submarines that were made by the Italians, and their lines are remarkably similar."

Navy gunners saved from a medium-sized United States merchantman sunk in the Atlantic on the night of May 12, told how they reluctantly abandoned ship without so much as a single pot-shot at the elusive Axis submarine that attacked them.

Sinking of the vessel was announced by the Navy today, after three injured members of the crew had been taken to St. Thomas, Virgin Islands, for medical attention and 15 others had been landed here. Survivors believed all but one of the remaining 22 crewmen had reached lifeboats and rafts, although they had not been reported.

After one torpedo struck the vessel, Paul C. Padgett of Jacksonville said he and other members of the naval gun crew were ordered to man the gun. Anxiously they peered into the darkness, hoping for a clear shot at the submarine.

Instead, the crafty raider remained out of sight, probably submerged, and sent another torpedo into the ship. The freighter began to sink rapidly and was abandoned.

Gen. Zainov Executed in Sofia as Spy

Berlin (From German Broadcasts), June 1 (AP).—Gen. Vladimir Zainov, former Bulgarian minister of the interior, was executed by a firing squad today after a Sofia court-martial had convicted him of espionage, said a Sofia dispatch broadcast by the Berlin radio.

"He was a tool of bolshevism and its agents working under the protection of diplomatic immunity," the radio said. It added that the general, at his death a reserve officer, "never could get over the failure of his May, 1935, uprising," in which he was accused of plotting the death of King Boris.

Two other defendants were convicted. The general's nephew, Evgeni Tchemirov, was sentenced to life at hard labor and one Theodor Prashov was sentenced to death. Three others were acquitted.

Groussard Rearrested

Vichy, June 1 (AP).—Colonel Groussard, former head of the "protection groups" which took over guard duties at the time Pierre Laval was removed from the French government, December 30, 1940, was reported to have been rearrested at Cannes.

He was released only a few months ago from internment at Vals-les-Bains where he had been confined since September, 1941.

British Strike Ends

London, June 1 (AP).—Ten thousand miners voluntarily ended a strike for higher wages today and returned to pits in the Yorkshire, Durham and Swansea Valley coal fields pending negotiations among their leaders and the government.

Another 3000 Yorkshire miners went back to work over the weekend when the government, acting under defense regulations took control of two collieries.

Craft Based in India Pummel Japanese at Rangoon, Myikyina

By John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

American Army bombers made three successful air raids on Burma over the weekend, doing heavy damage to an enemy air base and the waterfront at Rangoon, the War Department announced last night.

The planes, big four-engined craft, launched their attacks from bases in India. All returned to their airdromes undamaged.

Planes Caught on Ground

In reporting the raids to the War Department, Maj. Gen. Lewis H. Brereton, commander of the American air forces in India, said that the Japanese-held air base at Myitkyina was attacked in daylight both Friday and Saturday. Grounded planes and runways were "heavily damaged," it was declared.

Following a reconnaissance flight over Rangoon Sunday, General Brereton's bombers struck at the docks and shipping in that important harbor yesterday, apparently at night.

One enemy tanker was sunk and other vessels were damaged, the War Department communique stated.

Caught Flat-footed

The raids on Myitkyina apparently caught the Japanese flat-footed for news dispatches from New Delhi, India, quoted official sources as saying that "no Japanese aerial or ground opposition was encountered."

When Rangoon was attacked yesterday, however, the Japs were more on guard. "Heavy antiaircraft fire" was encountered, the Army communique said, while ten enemy night fighters took wing in a vain effort to intercept the American bombers.

1700 Here Seek WAAC Commissions

Seventeen hundred Washington women, nearly four times as many as will be called from the entire Nation, have received application blanks from the Army recruiting office at Eleventh Street and New York Avenue Northwest for officers' training in the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps since last Wednesday.

Although requests for the pink blanks fell off after a bumper crop on the opening day, they took a sharp upward turn yesterday as about 300 women maintained a steady procession in Capt. Frank Sloan's office.

"We've had such a busy day today that I've had to send for more blanks," he reported an hour before the usual 5 p. m. closing time.

Several applicants yesterday afternoon had taken civil aeronautics training courses, which they offered under the heading of special qualifications.

Applications must be sent to the Army office in Baltimore on Thursday, closing date all over the Nation.

English Draw Belts Tighter As Clothing Ration Is Cut

London, June 1.—The new clothes rationing books went into operation today in England. Instead of 66 coupons, as heretofore, men and women have now only 51 of them for the next twelve months, and how best to distribute these little scraps of paper among the shops is going to prove a major headache in every household.

Juggling the coupons to obtain the best value is a game that all British families have played for the last year. They know, for example, that an overcoat—15 coupons—is worth a pair of slacks and a wool shirt, or two summer dresses and a dickey; and that a man's suit for 26 coupons is equal to a raincoat and two shirts.

How much to pay for clothes, and where to buy them are left to the individual, but once the 51 coupons have been used up there is no way of getting additional ones, except for persons who have been "blitzed," until a new rationing period.

Just how are people using their clothes coupons? Just what will 51 scraps of paper buy?

They will buy, for a woman, a winter coat, a winter dress, a pair of shoes, a nightgown, a set of underwear (vest and pants), two pairs of stockings and four small handkerchiefs. If she substitutes a summer dress for the winter one, she can also buy a slip or a corset. And if she lets her old coat do another year she can buy a skirt, a cardigan, and a pair of ankle socks.

The man in the family can buy a suit, an overcoat, a shirt, one pair of wool socks and a tie. If he leaves off the vest of his suit, he can substitute a pair of shoes or an extra pair of non-wool trousers. Or, if he is well fitted out with top clothes and wants to invest all his coupons in underwear, he can buy two suits of winter undervests and drawers, two pairs of pajamas, a bathrobe, a pair of bedroom slippers, and a dozen handkerchiefs.

If the glamour girl—providing there is one still left in England—wants to invest all her coupons in party clothes, she finds her allowance covers an evening wrap, three dresses with shoes to match and a bathing suit. Or, if she must have stockings, she can buy two pairs a month for a year—and still have enough left over for a pair of shorts.

All the year's coupons cannot be squandered at once. The books contains red, brown and green coupons, and these last—numbered from 1 to 20—are the only ones that can be used before October 12. They are, of course, valid after that date as well, and any coupons left over from the present rationing period can also be used up to October 12.

A quarter of a million tons of shipping have been saved on textiles alone as a result of the last 12 months of clothes rationing, and nearly 400,000 men and women have been released to the fighting forces and to industries directly engaged on war production.

Japs Launch Major Drive In Kwangtung

By the Associated Press

Chungking, China, June 1.—The Japanese have broadened their drive upon China's coastal provinces with a major offensive in Kwangtung, north of the occupied provincial capital of Canton, and heavy fighting is raging in this new theater, the Chinese command announced today.

The fighting spread to Kwangtung, China's southernmost seaboard province, following thrusts to the north last month against the Fukien Coast and across Chekiang Province. In the latter, the Chinese said a new Japanese advance had been offset by recapture of numerous towns in the enemy rear.

Coupled with Chinese successes in Chekiang, where the towns of Chenghsien and Changlochen were reported among those recaptured, the Chinese announced further advances by their forces driving toward Ichang, strategic port of the middle Yangtze and highwater mark of the enemy campaign in the heart of China.

In still another setback to the invader, the Chinese said Japanese forces which had landed on Yuhwan Island, off the south Chekiang Coast, had been forced back to their ships after 300 of the invaders were killed or wounded.

But farther inland, today's communique acknowledged loss of Showchang, 30 miles northwest of Kinhwa, fallen capital of Chekiang.

(In its version of the new drive in Kwangtung, the Domei News Agency of Japan said Japanese forces were making "a steady drive northward" above Canton against a Chinese army of "tens of thousands" under Gen. Yu Han-mou, commander of the Chinese seventh war zone. Japanese warplanes ranged ahead of the invading columns and heavily bombed towns along the Peh River and around Tsungfa, about 50 miles northeast of Canton.

(The Kwangtung operations, apparently another phase of the large-scale thrusts which many observers believe are designed to knock China out of the war, were following the parallel lines of the Peh River and the Canton-Hankow Railroad.)

On the southwestern battlefront, the Chinese reported fighting on the outskirts of Lungling, 25 miles from the Salween River and advance point of the Japanese penetration up the Burma Road.

Chinese troops intercepted Japanese reinforcements trying to reach Lungling from Wanting at the Burma-China frontier, advices reaching here said. Two hundred casualties were inflicted on the enemy and eight tanks and cars knocked out.

Japanese attacks in the Tengyueh sector, north of Lungling and west of the Salween, were reported repulsed. The Japanese hold Tengyueh and the Chinese have been closing around the city.

Bridges Begins 2 Legal Moves, 'Surrenders'

Harry Bridges, West Coast labor leader, who has been ordered deported on the ground that he is a Communist, "surrendered" in San Francisco yesterday and added two legal stratagems to his efforts to stay in this country.

There had been a deportation warrant out for Bridges, but it was not clear whether his "surrender" left him in custody. Reports from San Francisco said his arrest was held up pending the outcome of his legal moves.

Attorney General Biddle last week held that ever since it was set up in 1919 the Communist Party has been striving for the violent overthrow of the United States Government. Holding, also, that Bridges had been a member of the party since he came to this country in 1920, the Attorney General ordered him sent back to Australia.

Bridges' San Francisco attorneys indicated that they would seek a writ of habeas corpus for his release.

In Washington, another lawyer, Mrs. Carol King of New York filed a petition which asked Biddle to reconsider his Bridges decision and hold a hearing. Mrs. King contended that the Attorney General believed the wrong evidence when he reversed a reviw board and sustaind the finding of the presiding inspector, former Justice Charles B. Sears of the New York Court of Appeals.

Last July 11, Bridges condemned sending lend-lease materials to England but advocated sending them to Russia.

Mrs. King said in her petition that only by the requested hearing could "a labor leader whose work is important to the war effort be freed from extended and costly litigation which will serve to divert his attention from his important war efforts."

Russians Claim 432 German Planes in Week

By the Associated Press

Moscow, June 1.—Each side dug in on its new lines in the Crimea and the Ukraine and prepared for a possible outbreak of even greater battles on the southern front today as dispatches from the theater reported inaction for the first time in three weeks.

The midnight communique said there was no essential change in positions anywhere on the front during the day.

It listed 432 German planes destroyed in the week ending May 30, against 134 Russian losses for the period.

Soviet airmen were credited with destroying or damaging 33 Nazi tanks, 160 trucks with troops and supplies, 145 supply carts, two railway trains, and other equipment as well as partly annihilating up to four companies of German infantry during Sunday in various sectors.

In something resembling a standoff, the Russians about Kharkov were holding on to the wedges they had driven into the German lines and to a bridgehead across an important river where they had brought the German counter-attack to a stop after their own drive had slowed down.

As their part of the fruits of the first flurry of the 1942 spring campaign, the Germans now held all of Kerch Peninsula.

As an indication of the latent force in the area, a correspondent of the newspaper Pravda said Soviet reconnaisance had discovered that one German armored column, which wound through a city and reached on to the horizon, was moving toward the front.

The correspondent did not make clear, however, whether these were fresh forces or troops which had moved up in the course of the battle. He said Soviet aviation in three days destroyed 50 of the tanks.

Local activity over the weekend northwest of Moscow, where the Germans moved up reinforcements and the Russians attacked, suggested to observers that the next great burst of spring fighting might come in that sector instead of in the south.

West India Put Under Martial Law

New Delhi, June 1 (AP).—Martial law was declared today in the Sind district in western India after a series of train wrecks in which more than 6 persons have been killed in recent days. The Hurs, unruly tribesmen of the Sind area, were blamed for the wrecks.

A spokesman said suppression of the tribesmen would take four to six months. This is the first time since 1896 that martial law has been invoked against the Hurs.

Two Midget Jap Subs Found Sunk in Sydney Harbor

By the Associated Press

Allied Headquarters, Australia (Tuesday), June 2.—Three Japanese midget submarines which attacked Sydney Harbor Sunday night were destroyed and the wrecks of two have been recovered, General MacArthurs headquarters announced today.

All that the pigmy attackers accomplished was the sinking of an old steamer used as a ferry. It was sunk by the blast of a torpedo that struck the shoreline after missing a large objective.

The communique also said that nine Japanese planes, seven bombers and two fighters, which attacked Port Moresby in New Guinea yesterday were shot down.

Two Allied fighters were lost and slight damage was done to workshops and houses at the Allied base.

In offensive operations the Allies last night bombed and strafed the docks at Rabaul, New Britain, and just before dawn also smashed Japanese bases at Lae and Salamaua in northeastern New Guinea.

The results were not observed at Lae, but direct hits were made on Japanese runways at Salamaua and a large explosion occurred nearby.

Divers working on the harbor floor at Sydney raised the two wrecked baby submarines with the aid of grappling hooks.

The submarines, apparently launched from a mother ship because of their small range, intended to attack docks, defense installations and shipping. But they were discovered before they could do serious damage and met by a wall of shore artillery shells.

Armored Force Leaps Ahead At Fort Knox

Emotional Instability

Shell shock is a matter of grave importance in this war of tremendous and concentrated speed and firepower, only they don't call it shell shock any more; they call it emotional instability. It is obvious that any tendency to blow up under emotional strain would be intensified inside a tank, closed tight in a steel shell under terrific fire.

It occurred to the Armored Force people that tanks have been built as weapons, to do a job for weapons, without much thought of the four or six men who must furnish them with brains and nerves. So they are building a laboratory here which will determine how much men and tanks can stand and how to build tanks so their crews can operate at highest efficiency as long as possible.

Only about 15 per cent of a tank division actually fights in tanks. But these tank crews are the heart and soul of the armored division; the other 85 per cent are there to help the tanks get through, to back them up and to exploit immediately what the tanks have gained.

While it is bad to have a man go to pieces from shell shock in an infantry outfit, it is fatal if he fails in a tank. If he is a driver, the tank must stop; if he is another member of the crew, he can so demoralize the others that the tank is useless.

Laboratory Simulates Storms

In their new laboratory, they will be able to operate tanks with their crews at 60 degrees below zero or 140 degrees above. They will simulate sandstorms and snowstorms and high winds and torrential rains. Light mines will be exploded under the treads and projectiles will be bounced off the sides of tanks.

Apart from these physical tests, psychological tests will be given by qualified physicians. In the end, if a man is likely to suffer a bad case of the jitters buttoned up in a tank under fire, he will be discovered in advance and assigned to a job in the other 85 per cent, a job equally important to Armored Force success but less likely to shatter his nerves.

For the business of training officers and men to be first class Armored Force soldiers, Fort Knox maintains the replacement center and the Armored Force School. The replacement center, like those for other arms, takes young men from civil life and gives them basic training in soldiering.

When the recruit completes his preliminary training as a soldier, he is assigned to a light tank, medium tank, scout car, assault car or mortar company according to the need for trainees in those types of Armored Force work. There he becomes a driver or gunner as his aptitude develops.

School Grows Rapidly

Between 25 and 30 per cent of trainees on the basis of their civilian experience and aptitude, are sent to the Armored Force School, where they are trained as engine mechanics, motor vehicle mechanics, radio operators, clerks, cooks, bakers and the many other specialties needed to keep a highly mechanized outfit going.

In the Armored Force School, means and methods of training officers and men have been devised which make the most of what little time there is for learning. Foremost of all these methods has been application of assembly line procedure to training men.

So rapidly has the Armored Force grown in the past year that the school here, which was designed to turn out 800 officers and 7200 enlisted specialists a year now produces 4200 officers and 26,000 enlisted graduates every 12 months.

This remarkable increase was accomplished by rearranging classes so all equipment would be used all the time and dividing the time so two shifts could be given six hours of instruction every day. As one class finishes each part of the course, the next is moved into its place, one at the top is graduated and a new one is started at the bottom.

By working this way, a student who must lose time through illness or any other cause in the middle phase of training need not wait to start off again with a fresh class. He merely goes back to the beginning of the phase in which he dropped out and starts there. Instructors are quickly trained by this method also, by sending them several times through one phase until they know it inside out.

Textile Strikers Face Blacklisting

ployes left four vessels of the Detroit & Cleveland Navigation Co. tied up in Great Lakes ports. Union officials said the strike would extend to 1500 employes today.

Issues of the dispute were not clear, with the company officers declaring that wage demands were the cause of the strike, while union leaders insisted the company had violated a 1941 agreement by laying off part of the labor force which meets incoming vessels at Buffalo.

In the Hathaway strike it was not known yesterday whether the WLB would make its recommendations directly to the Selective Service System and to the Manpower Commission, which presumably has the power to blacklist the strikers from future employment, or whether it would take the problem to President Roosevelt. The latter course was considered the more probable.

The strike, dating from last Tuesday, arose when the textile company switched from the manufacture of special cloth to a simpler weave for military use. Weavers were given additional looms to tend. On their protest, arbitration was agreed to, each side picking an arbitrator and together agreeing on a third member of the panel. Although the union's panel representative agreed in the final award, the union rejected the decision and struck.

Board members are said to feel that the mere cancellation of draft deferments of the strikers is liable to be ineffective for the most part, since many of the weavers are over draft age or have dependents. The blacklisting, therefore, is under consideration as a direct punishment. Its enforcement would probably be done by the United States Employment Service, which would decline to enroll the strikers as job seekers and might advise all war contractors that the men had been outlawed as employes.

In the case of striking A. F. of L. machinists in September, 1918, President Wilson warned that he would imposed a blackout in the strikers did not return to their jobs. He declared that the men would be barred from any employment in war industry in the Bridgeport area for one year, or in any plant operated under Government supervision, and that the Government would decline to help them obtain work elsewhere.

House Bill Provides $1,300,000,000 for Auxiliary Naval Ships

Vinson Plans Vast Carrier Program Next

Carrying Administration approval, a bill authorizing immediate construction of 500,000 tons of auxiliary ships for the Navy, at an estimated cost of $1,300,000,000, yesterday was introduced, in the House by Representative Vinson (Democrat), of Georgia.

Vinson, chairman of the House Naval Affairs Committee, plans to supplement the legislation with an authorization for a vast additional aircraft carrier building program to throw a "bridge" of carriers across both oceans.

The Georgia Democrat, who has long pushed for more and more construction of planes and carriers as well as submarines and smaller ships, as against the heavier battle types, will ask his committee today to make a survey of facilities for construction of more carriers.

Looking Ahead to 1944-45

Vinson said the present carrier building program would be completed this year and next, and the new legislation would look forward as far as 1944 and 1945.

Before the war Congress authorized construction of 18 additional carriers. Of these, at least seven have been built and are in service and the remaining 11 are under construction. Actually, conversion of merchant and cargo vessels to smaller type carriers already is believed to have enlarged this program many times over.

The new auxiliary ships proposed in the bill introduced by Vinson yesterday specified that the new noncombat vessels would be of a type and character determined by the Navy. This program probably would include tenders, supply ships and tankers.

Billion for New Submarines

The House Appropriations Committee meanwhile was preparing to report late this week or early next on an authorization for the President to transfer some billion dollars of funds in the big Navy appropriation bill to start work on more than 125 new submarines, authorized in the Vinson bill enacted last month.

The House Naval Affairs chairman also introduced a bill yesterday suspending for the duration the Navy's rigid system of permanent selection, whereby only a fixed number of officers from each rank are permanently advanced to the next. Under that system, officers passed over twice are retired or honorably discharged. Under the proposed suspension, all Navy promotions would be for the period of the emergency. Many officers who would have been forced to retire this June 30, under the present law, including some who have been cited for heroism, would continue in the service.

Roosevelt Asks Billion for Ships

President Roosevelt asked Congress yesterday for $1,177,000,000 in appropriations supplementary to the budget for the new fiscal year beginning next July 1.

Of this, $1,100,000,000 was for the war shipping administration's revolving fund to be used in compensating owners for ships taken over by the Government and for maintenance and repair of the great merchant fleet being built.

Alaska Highway Was Located To Link Airways, General Says

By the Associated Press

Brig. Gen. C. L. Sturdevant, assistant chief of Army Engineers, testified yesterday that the need for linking airfields caused the War Department to choose the more easterly of three routes in constructing a strategic road across Canada to Alaska.

Senator Langer (Republican) of North Dakota, had charged in a resolution seeking an investigation that location of the road was "an engineering monstrosity" because a large section of the highway would have to cross muskeg swamp.

Sturdevant told a Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee that seven regiments of Engineers now were working on a 24-foot gravel road running northward from Dawson Creek, Canada, through Fort St. John, Fort Nelson, Watson, Lake, White Horse, Chonpogne and on to Fairbanks, Alaska. The general said 150 miles of "pioneer" road already had been built.

In his resolution, Langer said members of the Alaska International Highway Commission favored a coastal route originating near Prince George, Canada.

Sturdevant said, however, that the route east of the Rocky Mountains was chosen by the Army General Staff because an air route had been laid out there over which fighting planes as well as bombers could be flown. He said the coastal route would furnish an emergency access road to Alaska but would not link the air fields which previously had to be supplied by air.

Col. J. K. Tully of the General Staff operations division said that radio beacons had been installed and airdromes built along the eastern route from Dawson Creek.

When Langer said that members of the International Highway Commission did not believe the eastern route could be built in less than two years, Tully replied that Army engineers expected to complete a pioneer road this year.

Langer said he did not think a road could be built over the muskeg swamps but Sturdevant testified the engineers were skirting the swamp and building the road in nearby foothills.

John M. Holzworth of Washington declared:

"Sometimes our Canadian and English friends get the better of us diplomatically. We have had the wool pulled over our eyes in choosing for the Alaskan Highway a route from which Canada and the Canadian Pacific Railroad will receive all the benefits after the war."

Businessmen at War Labor

By the Associated Press

Rochester, N. Y., June 1.—Sacrificing sleep and leisure time, many of this city's doctors, lawyers, merchants and ministers are working midnight war plant shifts when their regular day's work is finished.

Their action, termed "without a parallel" by Lieut. Gen. William S. Knudsen, head of production for the Army, involves 300 business and professional men who toil at night in a shell manufacturing plant.

This idea of working long additional hours at a job requiring considerable physical effort sprang spontaneously from the ranks of men who wanted to do "more than I'm already doing to help win this war."

"Look," asked the sales manager of one of the city's largest laundries, of an official of General Railway Signal Corporation, "is there anything I can do in my free time to help out at your plant?

"Sure," he was told, "work a trick for one of our boys who hasn't had a day off for much too long."

That's the way General Railway's "Minute Men" started.

The sales manager passed along the word. Others were interested. Soon they were being trained for the jobs and, in a short time, were placed on the production line. Their numbers grew.

The money the "Minute Men" receive for their labors is largely turned over to the Red Cross, the U. S. O., or used to purchase war bonds. The Rev. George W. Cooke contributes all his wages to the China Relief Fund.

Budd Plant Reported Chosen to Build Steel Fleet of 'Flying Boxcars'

Washington Bureau of Chicago Sun

Flying boxcars of stainless steel to carry cargoes to fighting fronts over the world are to be built for the Government by the Budd Manufacturing Co. of Philadelphia, it was learned yesterday as WPB Chief Donald M. Nelson created a special committee to determine the full potentialities of this type of air craft.

It was revealed that the planes will carry a five-ton payload for 600 miles, and that they could be ferried under their own power without refueling for 5000 miles, provided extra tanks replace pay loads.

Stainless steel was selected as the metal for the planes in order to free the aluminum and magnesium supplies for military craft.

The first of the new cargo planes will be used for military purposes in transporting vital war materials over submarine infested areas in the war zones. The craft are to be designed to use almost any kind of landing fields, whether a cow pasture or a concrete runway.

Thus, they will be practical for transport of freight to vital sections in Latin-America, Africa, the Far East and other places where airports are not well developed.

Nelson announced, meantime, that the purpose of the committee he appointed would be to "obtain all the available facts relating to cargo planes, including the past use of airplanes for carrying cargoes and the future possibilities of such transportation techniques as they relate to production problems.

Nelson said there was "considerable interest" in the possibilities of "large-size, long-range airplanes capable of carrying substantial cargoes of all kinds." It is known that some aviation developers are already studying the possibilities of craft even larger than those to be built by Budd.

Iowa Voters Give Wilson, Herring Leads

By the Associated Press

Des Moines, Iowa, June 1.—Gov. George A. Wilson tonight took an early lead over his three opponents for the Republican nomination for United States Senator in today's Iowa primary election.

Of the State's 2461 precincts 387 gave Wilson 17,531 votes, State Secretary of Agriculture Mark C. Thornburg 11,901, James I. Dolliver 4808 and C. Scott Davies 1365.

Lieut. Gov. B. B. Hickenlooper shot out ahead of Secretary of State Earl G. Miller in the Republican race for Governor, with 123 out of 2461 precincts giving Hickenlooper 7799, to 1866 for Miller.

United States Senator Clyde L. Herring, seeking reelection, polled 13,317 votes in 358 precincts in the Democratic primary, against 4479 for his sole opponent, Ernest J. Seeman of Waterloo.

In the Democratic Governor's race, former Gov. Nelson G. Kraschel polled 2,377 votes in the first 118 precincts reporting, to 1,424 for his opponent, State Senator A. E. Augustine.

In the Republican senatorial race, most of the preprimary broadsides were fired by Thornburg and Wilson, with Thornburg seeking to pin the isolationist label on Wilson and the Governor striking back with equal force.

Isolationism also was an issue, to some extent, in the congressional races. All sitting Iowa Congressmen were candidates for reelection, but at least one was bound to lose out, since Iowa's nine districts were reduced to eight in the redistricting which followed the 1940 census.

Dr. R. S. Carey, Veterans' Agency Official, Is Dead

Dr. Carey, who lived at 1531 Forty-fourth Street Northwest, leaves his wife, Mrs. Alverine Carey, and a daughter, Sarah.

House Rejects Pipeline Measure

short notice for immediate relief, and in about 15 months a barge canal across Florida connecting the existing Atlantic and Gulf intracoastal waterways.

With this connecting link, the measure was ultimately designed to provide an inland waterway running 2400 miles from the Mexican border to Trenton, N. J., deep and wide enough to handle the largest barges.

As the Florida delegation split, Representatives Pat Cannon and J. Hardin Peterson (Democrats) of Florida told members that a 7-foot canal already runs across Florida from Fort Myer to Stuart, through Lake Okeechobee. Petersen said this channel could be deepened to 8 feet in a few weeks. They opposed construction of a new canal across North Florida, as provided in the bill. Their Florida colleague, Representative Lex Green, took sharp issue with them and led with Mansfield the fight for the combined pipe line and barge canal recommended by the committee. Green was one of the sponsors of the original ship canal, and Republicans promptly linked the old project with the new. Representative Dondero (Republican) of Michigan suggested it was the "entering wedge" for starting work on the ship canal, which has been sidetracked every time it came before Congress.

Representative Dirksen (Republican), of Illinois, told the House that the President already has authority to order construction of the pipeline and challenged the contention that the $144,000,000 proposed pipe and barge line had War Department backing.

Bitter over defeat of the bill, Mansfield accused Vandenberg of organizing overnight Republican opposition. Green accused "the railroads" of defeating the bill. Green indignantly denounced to reporters the opposition of some Eastern members. "Let them freeze for awhile and they'll be back demanding this bill," Green said.

15 District Girls Among 54 Receiving Diplomas at Madeira School Exercises

"SWEET GIRL GRADUATES"—Susan Carroll Oulahan, Barbara Gableman and Pauline Longworth (from left) are three Washington girls among those who were graduated yesterday from Madeira School

Fifty-four girls, 15 of them from the District, received diplomas from Mrs. David Laforest Wing, head mistress of the Madeira School, in commencement exercises on the campus near Greenway, Va., yesterday.

In a short informal address to the graduates, their families and friends, Mrs. Wing centered her remarks on "education as a discipline" and recalled an article written by a British coordinator of defense after World War I.

His theory on discipline, Mrs. Wing said, was that there were three great divisions. One was in the realm of the law; as an example, if one placed his hand in the fire, he was burned. The second was freedom of choice; one could choose one's friends freely. The third he emphasized as an essential to democracy: The obedience to the unenforceable, which was shown in the sinking of the Titanic, when men stood aside so that women and children could be saved.

The Rev. Paschal D. Fowlkes, of St. John's Episcopal Church in McLean, Va., pronounced the invocation.

Following the awarding of diplomas, the graduating class entertained at supper in the big dining room at the school.

Washington girls graduated were Anne Warren Bird, Eugenia Louise Bird, Lois Haven Crane, Barbara Gableman, Dorothy Adair Guider, Catherine Ann Guthrie, Emilie Letts Jones, Pauline Longworth, Nancy Pendleton Mapp, Mary Walbeck Mitchell, Susan Carroll Oulahan, Martha Richardson, Virginia Brooks Summers, Agnes Waller and Carolyn Aida Wilkins.

Others were Helen Barr Abbott, Margery Gene Abeyt, Margaret Boyce Adair, Sylvia Allen, Mary Curtis Barber, Julie Maynard Barnes, Nancy McGhee Baxter, Ruth Ann Bennett, Adele Bethel, Grace Bassick Dickson, Eleanor Edmondson, Frances House Ellis, Patricia Gardner, Alberta Gillette, Polly Lum Hart, Harriet Harvey, Dorothy Virginia Hawkins, Anne Hightower, Harriet Kells House, Helen Ann Hubbell, Sarah Huntington, Jean Hale Johnston, Helen Ross Lipscomb, Mary Buckminster Lothrop, Elizabeth Livermore Manning, Adelaide Marshall, Mary Wonderly McAllister, Florence Millard, Barbara Ann Moore, Alice Louise Olmsted, Joan Averill Powers, Cicely Ann Rising, Jane Slagle, Nancy Griffin Stevens, Frances Kimbrough Watts, Mary Webb, Sally Lucille Whitney, Margaret Lynn Williamson and Martha Wooster.

London sources said that the men who had made the attempt on Heydrich, who lies gravely wounded in Prague, probably were assisted or actually smuggled into Bohemia by anti-Hitler Germans who are cooperating with underground organizations in the occupied territories.

These sources said the assailants, believed to have been Czechs, could hardly have been stationed for a successful ambush without help or information from persons actually in the Heydrich entourage.

Mileham to Be Sworn In as Raid Chief Tonight

An efficient way of financing the District air-raid warden service was promised last night by William J. Mileham, who will be sworn in tonight as chief air-raid warden.

Mileham will take the oath of office at the regular meeting of all deputy air-raid wardens at 8 p. m. in the warden headquarters, 1341 Maryland Avenue Northeast.

District Coordinator John Russell Young last night promised Mileham full cooperation from the District. As a matter of fact, Young said, Mileham has to get more help than was given his predecessor, Clement Murphy, "because," Young said, "Mileham has to make his living and can't give as much of his time to the warden service as Murphy could."

May Get Full-Time Aide

Murphy, who is drill master at the Fire Training School, gave as the principal reason for his leaving the warden service the fact that he was called upon to do two full-time jobs as once.

Young indicated that one way of giving Mileham help might be the employment of a full-time paid assistant. One of the conditions that Mileham took the job upon was that he should have full authority in selecting his assistants.

He said last night that some plan for equitable financing of warden posts must be worked out. For one thing, he said that some areas (such as the American University section) could well afford to equip its own post and help some poorer area where getting nickels for the support was difficult.

"There should be some way to spread this money around," said Mileham.

Civilian Defense Executive Lemuel Bolles said that the District had high priorities next to the West Coast for getting equipment from the OCD's 100 million dollar allotment. Helmets, armbands, tools and pumps were among the items he said Young was "going to bat for."

Some deputy air-raid wardens indicated that they did not approve of getting any money at all by public subscription. Among these areas are the Kalorama, the American University and the Petworth. Kalorama has a $3600 budget for the coming fiscal year, but that is only for office expense—telephone, stationery and stamps.

Boy, 3, Rescued From Mountain

Williamsport, Pa., June 1 (AP).—Three-year-old Alvan Diggan, who was lost for two days and two nights in a snake-infested mountain forest, was found crying and bewildered today, 2 miles from his home.

The briar patches and thick underbrush through which the blond-haired boy wandered had ripped off all his clothing. Scratches covered his arms and legs, but he was otherwise uninjured. The boy was taken to a nearby hospital.

Sergt. T. G. Moriarity of the State motor police, who led several hundred searchers through the long hunt, reported that "the boy is in good shape."

This Is Our War

Wipe Out Discrimination

Let NEGROES Fight Equally

THIS IS THE WAR of every American—regardless of race, creed, or color—because the national independence of our country is at stake.

NEGRO AMERICANS, especially, want to defeat Hitler because Nazi slavery threatens our onward march to full freedom.

THE SECURITY of America and the defeat of Hitler make it imperative to open a western front in Europe NOW.

THE STRONGEST national unity of the whole American people against the common enemy is needed to win victory in 1942.

THE FULL ENERGIES of thirteen million Negro Americans must be released for our total war effort. Every barrier which keeps Negroes from full and equal participation in our war program must be torn down immediately.

THE NEGRO PEOPLE'S demand for full equality in America's war offensive is a demand to WIN THE WAR.

JOB DISCRIMINATION must be abolished in war industries. Tens of thousands of Negro men and women must be given jobs at once making planes, tanks and guns to beat the Axis.

END DISCRIMINATION and segregation in the armed forces. Negro and white soldiers and sailors fighting together in the spirit of equality will strengthen the morale of our fighting men.

END ALL FORMS of Jim-Crowism in civilian life. Prosecute lynchers as traitors to our nation at war. Disband the Ku Klux Klan. Pass the anti-poll tax bill and involve every citizen in our democratic war effort.

UNDER THE LEADERSHIP of President Roosevelt progress has been made in removing some of the hindrances to the Negro's participation in the war.

EXAMPLES are the President's executive orders against discrimination in war industries and in government agencies, steps toward larger opportunities for service in the Navy, and the indictment of men guilty of attacks upon the civil liberties of the Negro People. These are historic measures which point the way. BUT THEY ARE NOT ENOUGH TO MEET THE URGENT WAR TASK FACING AMERICA.

COMPLETE INTEGRATION of the Negro People into all phases of our war offensive is a vital responsibility of the whole nation. Negroes should be included in all administrative councils conducting our common war effort, in keeping with their dignity as a people and as American citizens. The Negro People look to organized labor, a powerful ally, to rally the nation in the achievement of this goal.

WE HAIL labor's determination to keep its ranks united and strong against such defeatists as John L. Lewis, whose disruptive tactics endanger the trade unions and the war program.

DEFEATISTS are enemies of the Negro People as well as the war effort. The Westbrook Peglers, the Martin Dies, the Norman Thomases are disrupting national unity by spreading lies that Hitler wants us to believe. The patriotism of JOE LOUIS and DORIE MILLER are symbols of the Negro People's rejection of defeatism. Negro Americans are determined to win victory at all costs.

THOSE WHO WOULD use selfishly the just demands of the Negro People, to obstruct America's war program are not friends of the Negro. They work for Hitler.

THESE TIMES DEMAND that Negro People become unified. The people themselves can build that unity by planning and working for it in all their organizations. Unity can become a greater force to win the war. Unity can gain full citizenship rights for Negroes. United we can join with our allies in America in the march to victory.

WHAT YOU CAN DO

1. Do Everything You Can to Win Our War

Support our Commander-in-Chief against the defeatists. Urge a western front now to win the war in 1942.

2. Urge the removal of all discriminatory bars from the war effort.

Report to the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices all cases of job discrimination. Urge strengthening of this Committee. Urge use of the War Manpower Board to accomplish mass training and mass employment of Negroes. Petition our national government to set up mixed brigades and naval units.

3. Expose the disrupters of war unity.

Demand the suppression of the Ku Klux Klan and all other anti-Negro, anti-Semitic, anti-Catholic, anti-labor groups which seek to destroy national unity.

4. Promote unity among Negroes for victory and full citizenship.

In every organization plan and work for the broadest unity of Negro people to win their rightful place with all other Americans to achieve full victory.

Bostonians See Man Slay Girl, Students Catch Him in Chase

Associated Press WIREPHOTOS

HARRY ADAMS — FIDELLA BRIAND

By the Associated Press

Boston, June 1.—An attractive 18-year-old blonde was slashed to death in broad daylight today near the populous Charles River esplanade and her assailant was captured almost on the spot by three college students.

As Fidella Briand of Woburn, a business college student, ran screaming along the river bank closely pursued by her attacker, the Boston University boys ran to her aid.

"But she stumbled," one of the students said, "and the man caught up with her."

There was a scuffle in a clump of riverside bushes and a foot-long butcher's knife slashed at the girl.

A charge of murder was lodged against a man booked as Harry J. Adams, 28, a Somerville dishwasher and a former inmate of a mental institution. He will be arraigned tomorrow.

He was grabbed by the students a scant 200 yards from the scene and they held him for police.

A 12-inch butcher's knife, thrown into the river just before the capture, was recovered later.

Patrolman James Leonard quoted the prisoner as saying:

"I wanted a woman. I want to get the chair."

Committeemen Rewrite Trust Suits Measure

By Robert De Vore
Post Staff Writer

The Senate Judiciary Committee yesterday decided to require Department of Justice approval as a prerequisite for suspension of the antitrust and Federal Trade Commission Acts on behalf of manufacturers organizing for war production and essential civilian supply.

"It was the unanimous judgment of the committee that the Department of Justice should not be bypassed in these laws," declared Senator O'Mahoney (Democrat) of Wyoming, in explaining why the committee rejected the request of Undersecretary of War Robert Patterson and others that War Production Board Chairman Donald M. Nelson be granted authority to suspend the laws subject only to certification to Attorney General Francis Biddle.

Measure Recast

In reporting antitrust suspension legislation to the Senate, the committee virtually rewrote a measure recently submitted to Congress through Administration channels. Its action represented a preliminary triumph for the Justice Department's antitrust division which for weeks has engaged in a behind-the-scenes battle with the War and Navy Departments over antitrust suspensions.

The measure reported by the committee would require approval by the Attorney General before the WPB chairman could certify to him that violation of the laws should be "deemed in the public interest" and, therefore, no grounds for criminal or civil action.

The committee also accepted a new section of the bill, written by a subcommittee headed by O'Mahoney, which would require the Attorney General to report to Congress at least every 120 days on antitrust waivers. It also approved a provision instructing Biddle to publish certification of waivers in the Federal Register, giving such details as he determines to be in the public interest.

The original bill, introduced by Judiciary Chairman Van Nuys (Democrat) of Indiana, at the request of Administration officials, would have authorized suspension of the laws upon certification by Nelson to Biddle that, in carrying out WPB orders, industries would be compelled to function in ways that would have put them in jeopardy of antitrust action. Biddle would have been given the authority to determine whether WPB orders were requisite to the prosecution of the war."

The question of whether the Justice Department should be the deminating factor in determination of antitrust waivers may be threshed out today in the House-Senate conference on the small business bill.

Forcasting a controversy in the conference committee, Senator Hughes (Democrat) of Delaware, chairman of Senate conferees, last night declared that the Senate members of the committee are "considering" insisting either on deletion or revision, in line with the Judiciary Committee decision, of a section of the small business bill which would authorize Nelson to waive antitrust or Federal Trade prosecutions without reference to the Justice Department.

Bilbo Defers Vote on Army, Navy 'Dry' Bill

By the Associated Press

The decision of Senator Bilbo (Democrat), Mississippi, to postpone a test vote on a bill to prohibit possession and sale of alcoholic beverages in or near Army and Navy posts today signaled a lull in Senate activities.

Instead of calling up the controversial measure today as originally planned, Bilbo and his colleagues decided to call a public hearing June 22—an informal forum to which Henry Ford and other private citizens have been invited.

The Senate met only briefly yesterday and recessed until Thursday, at which time the revised small business aid bill may come up for final approval.

Conceded Good Chance to Pass

Some Senators said the military prohibition measure had a good chance of Senate passage, with strong pressure from church and temperance bodies offsetting the War Department's frank opposition.

In a Senate speech some time ago Bilbo said his mail was heavy with appeals from mothers of soldiers for legislation to control "the liquor evil around our training centers."

"Wartime psychology is such that sometimes even the best of boys, finding themselves far away from the stabilizing influences of home, are easy prey for that most insidious of saboteurs—John Barleycorn," Bilbo declared. In the first World War, he said, thousands of soldiers and sailors became physically and mentally disabled from the effects of "liquor habits and social diseases."

Stimson Disapproves Bill

Secretary of War Stimson voiced his disapproval of the bill more than a year ago. He wrote the Senate Military Affairs Committee, which reported the measure out without recommendation, that "it would be harmful to the men in the service, as well as unnecessary, to direct a prohibition against them that did not apply to other citizens."

The War Department, Stimson declared, not only is "firmly convinced that such legislation would not be in the interest of temperance in respect to the armed forces, but would be used as a stepping stone for a movement leading to nation-wide prohibition."

He noted that present laws forbid the sale of intoxicants on military reservations, but permits the sale of 3.2 beer and light wine.

The bill, introduced 15 months ago by the late Senator Sheppard (Democrat), Texas, has reposed on the calendar since May 16, 1941.

Oklahoma Sterilization Law Is Voided

Supreme Court Holds Statute Discriminatory

By William R. Spear
Associated Press Staff Writer

Declaring that important questions of human rights were involved, the Supreme Court held unconstitutional yesterday an Oklahoma law for the sterilization of certain habitual criminals.

The court struck down the statute because it singled out only certain types of criminals. Such "clear, pointed, unmistakable discrimination" was called as "invidious as if it had selected a particular race or nationality for oppressive treatment."

Among 14 other decisions yesterday the Supreme Court also:

Ruled that the wage-hour law applies to employes of buildings housing companies engaged in interstate commerce.

Upheld the right of radio chains to a court review of the Federal Communication Commission's regulations on chain broadcasting.

Held that State courts are not necessarily required to appoint counsel for indigent persons in all criminal cases.

Decision Is Unanimous

The Oklahoma sterilization act provides for the sterilization of men or women thrice convicted of felonies but specifically excepts "offenses arising out of the violation of the prohibitory laws, revenue acts, embezzlement or political offenses."

The case at issue involved Jack T. Skinner, 34, of Pittsburg County, Okla., who was convicted once of stealing chickens and twice of armed robbery and ordered in 1937 to be sterilized. The court pointed out that Oklahoma treats larceny and embezzlement the same, as far as fines and prison terms are concerned, and that if Skinner had embezzled the chickens as an employe of the owner instead of stealing them as a stranger, he would not have been subject to sterilization.

The situation, said the majority decision by Justice Douglas, violates the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, which guarantees all citizens equal protection of the laws. There was no dissent, but Chief Justice Stone and Justice Jackson wrote separate concurring opinions.

In another decision yesterday the court held, 8 to 1, that the wage-hour law, with its minimum pay and maximum hour requirements, applies to elevator operators, porters and other service and maintenance employes of buildings which house companies engaged in interstate commerce. Justice Roberts dissented, saying that "the power of Congress does not reach the purely local activities in question."

Maryland Decision Upheld

The act applies to employes "engaged in (interstate) commerce or in the production of goods for commerce" and specifies that workers shall be deemed to be employed in producing goods for interstate commerce if employed "in any process or occupation necessary to the production thereof, in any State."

The Supreme Court upheld a decision of the Maryland Court of Appeals in ruling that appointment of counsel to represent an indigent person in a State court is not necessarily required by the Constitution.

The court's ruling was rendered in a decision denying the release of Smith Betts from the Maryland Penitentiary on a writ of habeas corpus. The Maryland Court of Appeals previously had rejected Betts' application for release and he appealed to the Supreme Court.

Betts, who was sentenced by the Circuit Court of Carroll County, Md., to eight years' imprisonment for robbery, contended that before his trial he had asked and had been denied appointment of counsel to represent him.

In a 6-to-3 decision rendered by Justice Roberts, the court held that there was no "inexorable command" in the Constitution that a defendant must be represented by counsel to obtain a fair trial. Justices Black, Douglas and Murphy dissented.

Defense Cites Sixth Amendment

Betts' counsel had argued that the Supreme Court had held that the sixth amendment to the Constitution required appointment of competent counsel to represent indigent persons in Federal courts.

In a 5-to-3 decison, the court held that the Columbia Broadcasting System and the National Broadcasting Company were entitled to judicial reviews of the Federal Communication Commission's proposed regulations on chain broadcasting. The decision reversed the action of the Federal District Court in New York in dismissing the companies' suits.

Commenting in New York on the radio decision, C. B. S. President William S. Paley said:

"It puts an end to the technical and procedural objections raised by the commission and which have until now blocked any judicial review of the basic issues raised by the FFC network rules and the widespread evils which would result therefrom."

The Supreme Court upheld the method employed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in computing the foreign tax credit allowable to a United States corporation which receives dividends from a foreign corporation under its control. The case was that of the American Chicle Co. of Long Island City, N. Y., with subsidiaries in Canada and Mexico.

The court also held that post exchanges at Army camps "are arms of the Government, deemed by it essential for the performance of governmental functions," and reversed a California Supreme Court ruling to the contrary in a tax case.

The high court ordered reargument on October 12 of litigation involving the constitutionality of legislation increasing from 15 to 49 cents per bushel the penalty on wheat marketed in excess of AAA quotas. The case was brought by a group of Montgomery County (Ohio) farmers.

A 4-to-2 decision ruled that the Federal District Court at South Bend, Ind., had acted correctly in continuing until January 1, 1934, a consent decree restraining the Chrysler Corporation from acquiring an interest in any automobile finance company.

George H. Keys of Kansas City, Mo., failed to obtain a review of his conviction on a charge of sending a letter in interstate commerce seeking to "extort" money from the Aluminum Association of Pittsburgh under a threat to distribute a pamphlet saying the use of aluminum cooking utensils is harmful to human health.

A review was denied the Manila Gas Corporation, which challenged the constitutionality of a $32,292 income tax assessment on interest and dividends paid by the company to the Islands Gas & Electric Co. of Jersey City and New York for 1934, 1935 and 1936. The latter company is a stockholder and creditor of the Manila Co.

Because of the large volume of business pending, the court agreed to hold another decision day next Monday.

Sent Corregidor's Last Message

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

IRVING STROBING, of Brooklyn, N. Y., tapped out a series of messages from Corregidor May 5 describing the final hour before surrender of the Philippine Island fortress, the War Department announced yesterday

War Damage Insurance Plan Still in Formative Stage

While the President signed the bill more than two months ago authorizing the billion-dollar War Damage Corporation plan, to cover damages due to enemy action, the organization is only now in the formative stage, a spokesman for the RFC stated yesterday.

He pointed out, however, that under the terms of the bill the corporation is given until July 1 to set up the agency and establish Nation-wide uniform insurance rates to cover property damage caused by air raids and other actions by the Axis.

Until the War Damage Corporation becomes effective next month, all property owners are protected, without premium, by the 100-million-dollar fund set up by the Government soon after the Pearl Harbor attack.

Nothing Done Yet

Neither uniform rates, personnel of the corporation or other details have been worked out at the present time, the RFC spokesman stated, but believed that a formal announcement would be made "within a short time."

A tentative set-up for the new corporation calls for a board of directors composed of officials of the RFC and representatives of the large insurance companies, who will participate in the group.

Although several plans have been suggested, the following tentative schedule of rates appears to be receiving the most serious consideration: dwellings, less than five families, and farm property, 10 cents on each $100 of the property's value; churches, hospitals, schools and public buildings, 10 cents on each $100 for fireproof structures, and 15 cents for non-fireproof; apartments, hotels, warehouses, office and non-mercantile buildings, 15 cents for fireproof and 20 cents for non-fireproof; manufacturing plants and all others, 20 cents for fireproof and 30 cents for non-fireproof; railways and railroads, except rolling stock, 30 cents for each $100, and rolling stock, 25 cents for each $100.

These rates would apply where the risks are 50 per cent coinsured, except in the first instance, dwellings, where no coincurance is required. Succinctly, coinsurance means that a common peril is shared by all interested parties. The principle is that the entire property at risk should bear the burden of the loss or any part of it.

"Reasonable" Protection

Under the terms of the bill authorizing the RFC subsidiary, it provides that the War Damage Corporation make available through insurance or reinsurance, "reasonable protection" against loss or damage to real or personal property, resulting from enemy attack, including damage caused by United States forces resisting such attack.

Commerce Secretary Jesse Jones has already indicated that the minimum rate will be $1 for each $1000 of insurance. The law provides that the rates be uniform for each type of property and be based upon the average risk of loss of all property of similar types in the United States. Thus, the rate for a brick dwelling in Virginia would be the same in Oregon.

Husband Brings Suspect to Police

Mrs. Irene Willen, 44, of 4839 New Hampshire Avenue Northwest, brought to police headquarters yesterday by her husband and her brother, was released on $2000 bond last night after being charged with embezzlement of $2450 from her employers, the Fields Clothing Store, 722 Fourteenth Street Northwest.

Mrs. Willen had been sought on a police warrant since May 23, when she failed to return money she admitted taking, according to Jacob Abelson, store manager.

WHOSE WAR IS THIS?

WHAT ARE WE FIGHTING FOR?

Why will we win?

THESE are fair questions. It is time they were answered plainly—in words that a hundred and thirty million people will understand—and never again allow themselves to forget.

Whose war? Pearl Harbor answered that! Shells raining on California oil wells answered it. Men dying in the sub-infested waters of the Atlantic Coast answer it. This is our war! War for our lives! Every last one of us!

But is America aware of the greater thing we fight for? We know—as the whole world around us knows—that we are privileged to live as no other people on earth have ever lived. Do we know why?

WE speak easily of the glorious freedom in our way of living—the rare heritage that is ours in freedom of speech—freedom of worship—freedom of enterprise. Are we aware of their true values? Do we clearly understand this American principle of Free Enterprise? This system that has encouraged free men to engage in the work of their own choice. That has enabled small business to grow into big business as it sensed and served the needs of America's homes. Do we know why we live in the world's most complete and comfortable homes—why we own automobiles, appliances, conveniences beyond the comprehension of those who would destroy our way of life?

We need a clear understanding of this simple pattern of American living—now challenged by Axis powers. We need a clear understanding of this nation's progress under Free Enterprise.

WE know that our faith in Victory—and the faith of our armed forces—rests upon the ability of American industry to mass produce. But do we know that the mass production miracle now being performed is not the miracle of today—but of the years? That it has been more than a half century in the making? That our system of Free Enterprise has made it possible?

Now—if ever—Americans must understand America. We must know why and how our way of living reaches so deeply into our lives and our homes. Why we are all a part of it. How it can offer greater promise for our future.

TODAY this nation fights, works and saves to win the war and prepare for peace. The Saturday Evening Post has long been privileged to have a part in the growth of America—her homes—her people—her great industrial system. To promote a clearer national understanding of our pattern of life—we shall regularly publish a series of advertisements in the Post beginning June 6, page 95. They will tell a simple story of Free Enterprise, of our industrial system—and the pattern of progress which today gives us our faith in Victory—our hope for tomorrow.

Test Raid

It is most important that local residents proceed about their business this morning without taking advance account of the fact that there will be a 15-minute air raid test sometime between 10 and 11 o'clock. The test is supposed to be a surprise. Its primary purpose is to provide an effective check on defense preparations. This cannot be done, of course, if there is any widespread disposition to change the normal morning routine. Defense officials have emphasized that if you would ordinarily be out on the street or in shops between 10 and 11 a. m., you should make a point of carrying on this morning as usual. This, it seems, is not too much to ask of the individual.

So far we have no reliable gauge of our ability to take cover promptly and efficiently during the daytime. This morning the customary air raid precautions observed at night—with the exception of blacking out—will be in effect. Only emergency traffic will be allowed to proceed, and pedestrians will be directed to shelters. Naturally the business of taking cover in daylight will be more difficult than at night for the simple reason that daytime traffic is far greater. It follows, therefore, that the burden on the regular and auxiliary services will also be greater. The least we can do is to help defense officials calculate the adequacy of Capital preparadness by carrying on as usual, and by cooperating with the members of the protective agencies.

American Atrocities

An interesting study in Japanese propaganda methods is afforded by the story of "American atrocities" published in the newspaper Asahi of Tokyo under the guise of a Rome dispatch. It is interesting because it concerns a matter in which all the facts are well known to Americans and thus the degree of departure from truth can be accurately measured.

The atrocities are said to have included lynchings and "indescribable humiliations" perpetrated by American mobs upon Japanese and Japanese-Americans in the United States in the days immediately following Pearl Harbor. What Asahi would evidently like its readers to believe is that eyewitness testimony to these outrages was taken to Rome by the recently repatriated Italian diplomatic officers and journalists. Just how the Italian journalists were in a position to scoop American correspondents on such a story is, of course, not explained.

What are the facts?

One of the most extraordinary phenomena of this extraordinary war was the restraint and self-discipline of the West Coast population amid the alarms, apprehensions and excitements of last December and January. Except for a few windows broken during blackouts, there were virtually no violent demonstrations of any kind. On the contrary, many Americans announced their confidence in the loyalty of the great bulk of California's Japanese. There was, to be sure, one report of a Japanese being knifed in a fight with an angry Filipino, but the assailant was arrested and clashes between Filipinos (whose kinsmen were then being mercilessly bombed in their villages and towns) and the California Japanese were averted by the energy and good sense of Filipino leaders. After disclosure of the parts played by the Japanese Fifth Columns in Hawaii and the Philippines, the tension naturally increased, and demands for the evacuation of both native and American-born Japanese from the coast areas grew louder. But even then there was no violence and when at last the evacuation was decided upon, it was directed not by any mob, nor by any political police, but by a highly disciplined Army.

The choicest part of the Asahi story, however, concerns the Japanese newspaperman in New York who after being "rudely awakened in the middle of the night" knocked four policemen cold before he was overwhelmed by superior numbers. One wonders what the Japanese authorities could have been thinking about to waste such a fellow in New York when his services were so badly needed in Luzon or at the China front.

Brave New World

Matthew Arnold once said that liberty is a fine horse to ride, but it was necessary to know where you are riding it. The observation applies to this war. This is a war for the reestablishment of the freedom of man. But the common man wants to know what we are going to do with our liberties when we have reestablished them. That is natural enough. The intelligent man can fight well only when he sees that we are headed for "a more perfect peace." A series of recent addresses by members of this Administration will now give him to understand that it is a more perfect peace that the spokesmen of this Administration have in mind after the carnage is over.

The latest outline of this new world was drawn by Undersecretary of State Sumner Welles in a notable Memorial Day speech. Mr. Welles was nothing if not forthright. The age of imperialism, he said, is ended. That means that in the next world order there must be full respect for the sovereignty of all nations, no matter what continent they inhabit. The declaration should find an immediate and heartening response in Asia. Even China, which has proved such a valiant fighter in behalf of the United Nations, still is in leading strings, still is subject to discriminations in international dealings. The Wellesian credo would end a state of things which is a hangover of the old nineteenth century imperialism.

The world-mindedness of Mr. Welles' approach is significant. Mr. Welles has been thought of as a regionalist, or a man whose vision is limited to this continent. Any such idea will be dispelled by his vigorous espousal of a world organization. If for no other reason than the necessity of keeping law and order after the shooting is over, there must be a world organization after the war. And it must have teeth in it. Only a world organization which is based upon a police force—as a sort of extension of the United Nations—could prevent chaos from taking the place of war.

That must be the case even after the environment has been restored for peaceful living. On that rock—our inability to contribute to the collective security—the League of Nations broke up. In prewar days there was too much criticism of the League of Nations as a piece of machinery which somehow ought to have functioned without human assistance. But the League perished because the peoples of the world were not League-minded. It was what Mr. Welles calls our "selfishness" that brought this experiment in world order to its grave. Specifically we refused to abate our national sovereignty to the extent needed to establish a world community. The American colonies should have shown us the way—by the manner in which they abated their sovereignty in making the American Union. In much the same fashion we shall have to contribute something of our sovereignty in order to insure a world freed from fear and thus enabled to work together for the common good.

We have learned now that we can have peace only if the world remains at peace. The price is that every nation must have a sense of responsibility for world order. There is no further need to argue that fact, since it became obvious even to the meanest intelligence by the manner in which this Nation was thrust into war. But there is another lesson that Mr. Welles underlines. Our own prosperity is dependent upon world prosperity. As Mr. Harold Butler, formerly head of the International Labor Office, says, in a new book called The Lost Peace, A Personal Impression: "Nations are no longer masters of their own economic houses." Their trade and finance are so closely interwoven that they constitute a single system. Thus after this war we shall only be responding to enlightened selfishness if we follow a policy of putting less fortunate nations on their feet and keeping them there. The brave new world which is now struggling to be born in men's minds will be born if these lessons are allowed to be realized in the statesmanship of the United Nations.

Josh Vs. Josh

What might otherwise have been a rather dull primary campaign out in Oklahoma was briefly enlivened by the appearance of a second Josh Lee, a farmer of Vinita, to contest the renomination of his better known namesake, Senator Josh Lee of Norman. The Senator complained to the State election board that the other Josh Lee's candidacy was "frivolous, fraudulent and not in good faith." So the board erased Farmer Josh's name from the ballot, and he is appealing to the State Supreme Court. We remember that some years ago an obscure Nebraska grocer named George Norris was persuaded to run for the Senate in the hope that he might divert to himself some of the votes intended for the more illustrious George Norris. Grocer Norris also was accused of bad faith and, indeed, later convicted of perjury in some connection or other and sentenced to jail. But, if we recall the case correctly, the charge of "frivolity" was not included.

Could the Oklahoma business by any chance be an instance of that form of frivolity which is called "joshing?" The verb "to josh" is defined by various authorities as "to make fun of, to chaff or banter." The etymology is somewhat uncertain. One school holds that the word is derived from Josh Billings, the celebrated nineteenth century American wit. Some students, however, hold that the word is derived from "joss," which in turn would be a Scots dialectic version of "jostle," i.e., to bump against or shove around. Thus the case might suggest an intention to josh Josh out of his seat.

On The Chin

Premier Churchill once warned his fellow countrymen against the folly of treating a retreat or a reverse, no matter how glorious, as a victory. General Stilwell makes no such mistake about Burma. "I claim," he says, "we got a hell of a beating." Nothing could be simpler, nothing truer. But General Stilwell is not content merely to hand a bouquet to the Japanese. As becomes a soldier he thinks we ought "to find out what caused it, go back, and retake it."

The answer is, of course, that we were again too little and too late. General Stilwell knows it. There is blame enough to spread among all the participants against Japan except China. For China, anxious about the Burma road, had 75,000 men on the border ready to take positions in Burma well in advance of the Japanese drive. But there was no prevision about Japanese aims, though in retrospect it seems incredible that there should have been none. Japan had never made any secret of her determination to bottle up China's lifeline, and her "coprosperity sphere" takes in Burma. Almost as unfortunate as the lack of prevision, moreover, was the serious underestimate of Japanese fighting ability. You cannot send a boy to do a man's job. Yet the British, after they had been persuaded that Burma would be attacked, imagined that a meager force could hold the Japanese.

The mistake on our part was to starve the Flying Tigers under General Chennault. Chennault and his men have performed prodigies, but they have never been given either good enough planes or adequate supplies to contest the Japanese in the air. With better planes for the AVG, with more men and guns on the ground, the Japanese could have been held. They are no supermen. It has been proved—and nowhere more than in Burma—that man for man they are no match for the men of the United Nations.

Certainly Burma will be retaken. But before that happens, the northeast frontier of India must be held. That area, which is served by Calcutta, has the rice, tea and cattle which feed India. Japan wants to lay hands on it, and it is here that we ought to apply the lessons of Burma. Also, we owe reparation to the Chinese for Burma. Let us hope that they will feel with us that the American spirit which shines through General Stilwell's laconic words is the spirit of the ultimate victor.

Rommel Thwarted

On May 26 Marshal Rommel issued an order of the day in which he informed the German and Italian troops under his command that they were about to undertake a "decisive attack" against the British forces in Libya. Claiming superiority in numbers for the Axis contingents, perfected armament and a powerful air force, he assured them of the certainty of victory. Unfortunately for him, fortunately for the British, his prediction has not panned out. At first the Axis forces did succeed in driving forward. They came within 50 miles of Tobruk, one of the principal objectives of the first stage of their drive. But the resistance which they then encountered was such as to put a serious crimp in their plans.

Although the battle still rages, there would now seem to be little doubt that the British have the situation in hand, that Rommel's forces received a heavy pounding, and that they lost a good deal of important equipment which they can badly spare. Moreover, they lost an outstanding German general whose plane was shot down while he was engaged on a reconnaissance flight. However, the British themselves admit that the Axis withdrawal to the west has partially succeeded. Since the war in Libya is a struggle in which territorial gains count for very little, and destruction of materiel counts for everything, a successful German-Italian retreat would prevent the British from immediately capitalizing on their victory to stage a drive to the west. Still, for the time being, they can congratulate themselves on having nipped in the bud a formidable attempt by Rommel to drive them out of Libya and perhaps push forward in the direction of Suez. Suez is again safe.

YOUR HEART IS A FOREST

Your heart is a forest
Where crisp ferns spread their coolness
Over the singing of hidden streams,
And white birches, like slender, young girls
At communion, sway against dark spruce trees.

Who comes to your heart must enter
By way of the turbulent torrent,
By the deep-throated song of the forest;
Who abides will flame with the sunrise
And fling songs to the rim of the stars.

A Good Kick

In these last few months I have visioned myself before the workers of the nation, not making a speech, but yelling as I did when I was a kid playing ball: "Come on gang, let's fight, let's get some spirit in the game." I do wish with all my heart that I could see the pep and enthusiasm I saw then; and to think we were not playing for anything except to satisfy our desire to be a winner. Here we are playing a game that means all the world to us, and what are we doing but poking along listlessly complaining of the monotony of mass production jobs, long hours, poor pay, no gas and no tires.

Now, if it takes a good kick in the seat of the trousers to put some spirit in Americans, I am for it. I am ready to take my kick, and to work like all getout to be a winner in this game called war.

I know that these few words cannot bring about the change of which I speak, but I do hope that some "great God-fearing American wih a thunderous voice" will make himself omnipresent to deliver the kick to each of us. Then if we have any entrails at all we will fight like—well, like Americans are capable of doing. JAMES P. SWANTON, Jr.
Washington, May 29.

Inconsistent

If our Government were consistent in its demands upon the people of this country we would all be much more willing to cooperate and do everything possible to help win this war, but when we see the people's money wasted on every hand and taxes mounting we, naturally, are very unhappy over the situation.

For instance, each morning as I walk to work a large NYA bus (with double tires making eight in all) passes me (driver furnished, of course) to take not more than six girls to an institution to help clean and wait on the sick. This is, of course, very nice for the young women, but we who are doing our best to conserve gas and tires in this crisis see no reason for this waste, especially since they could easily use the city bus, or walk, like most of us do. This is just one of the thousands of inconsistencies that we find all over this land of ours.

The NYA and WPA are not necessary to win this war and should have been abandoned long ago, but they are a part of the political setup in each State and are therefore retained. We are being called upon as never before for funds to carry us through to victory. Let us see that this money is used to this end and not squandered for political purposes.

Men Of 40

Why not draft a man of 40? I only wish I was head of the Selective Service Board. A man of 40 is not too feeble to get drunk and beat up his wife and stand on the street corners and play numbers all day and discuss the war and who should go. I am 44 years old and I would rather go than see an innocent boy that has never seen anything and has so much to live for. A man of 40 has had his pleasure. Why wouldn't any man go out to be blown up in his son's place? Are they afraid if the older man is drafted they might have to close the liquor stores? I hope that day will come and soon. Maybe our world would be a better place to live in. J. E. ALLEN.

Horrible Tales

For the second time in a week I have read in your paper stories of Japanese atrocities on our helpless men, now prisoners of war, and I am appalled that such stories are allowed to be printed. When one thinks of the agony the families of men in the Far East have been subjected to, it seems inhuman to see their fears verified in print and elaborated on.

By this time the near relatives of American prisoners of war number thousands, and there is scant comfort to them in reading of the big convoys to Ireland when our men are praying for deliverance thousands of miles in the other direction.

It seems to me that the least the censor could do would be to protect these frantic relatives from horrible tales, which no one doubts are true of a race whose cruel sadism has been proved a million times in China.

Respect For Flag

I wish to register a protest concerning the use of the American flag promiscuously. As a symbol—and an emblem of the freedom of America—restrictions concerning its illegal use should be enforced. In these times, as well as in less strenuous times, the Flag should be punctiliously revered. Seeing the Flag soiled and wrapped around its pole and dragging dirt on the roof of a streetcar is not exactly conducive to respect. Prohibitions should be put into effect against wearing the Flag on bumpers, where it is subjected to mud and the exhaust of automobiles.

The story of the men on Corregidor who twice rescued the Flag when it was shot from its pole above the fort is an illustration of the reverence with which those men hold the Flag. Shall we fail them by displaying Old Glory as if it were a mere banner proclaiming National Canned Peaches Week?

I think the police should endeavor to enforce the proper respect due to our National Emblem.

Tip With Stamps

When tipping at restaurants, why not say it with war stamps instead of coins, as a group of us have been doing for some time?

Washington, being a city of "eaters out," is admirably suited for a widespread movement of this kind. Since the stamps come in convenient tip size, dimes and quarters, it is an easy way to help the Government, also the recipient, at the same time. If the idea caught on, the restaurants and night clubs themselves might keep war stamps on sale for this purpose. Much money could be raised in this way to help the war effort.

In up-State New York one sugar registrant called it Sugaration Day. Which suggests the question: When will we reach "Saturation Day?"

Need For Terror

If unchecked within its terrible spirit of reprisal and blackmail, the Axis, which today shoots 200 innocent men in reprisal for the assassination of just one Nazi, may soon be saying to us: "Stop fighting by New Year, 1944, or we'll shoot every tenth man among all these peoples we have conquered! And if no peace by Easter, then good-by to every fifth man! And if no peace by summer, farewell to every other man!" (And what if no peace by that fall?)

Now that we know how utterly the Axis is ruled by terror, instead of kindliness, we are simply compelled by self-defense to act toward the Axis with the fullest measure of that terrorism by which the Axis lives. Resolutely, Winston Churchill warned the Nazis that their use of gas against the Russians would bring severest retaliation in the way of gas warfare on the part of the British. How well that worked!

What we should do now is push along this line. We should warn that any further reprisal shootings will also let loose gas warfare against Axis populations. Then the warning should cover shipping food from Greece, where hundreds starve to death daily. Then it should cover undefended cities, then the machine-gunning of civilians, and so on. Always a time interval should be allowed before the warning is to take effect, for the time interval is what works on the minds of Axis populations, softening up the "home front." And it is just this softening up of the home front which compels our enemies to heed our warnings.

In the end it would be we, not the Axis, who would say: "Cease fighting within three weeks, or prepare to see one-tenth, one-fifth, even one-half your population perish within a week thereafter!" Such resolute action could shorten this war by not months, but years.

Saving Rations

A disturbing rumor is abroad that the gasoline rationing authority may take action which in some respects will distress the motorist without helping the war effort at all. While it is to be hoped that this will not occur, it seems worth mentioning now, since after definite action has been taken remonstrance or explanations will have less chance.

The chief threat is that motorists will be required to use their card allotments promptly, and the object of this is to prevent them from saving up for any trip of considerable length. This implies that trips are supposed to be always wasteful.

This regulation will not save a spoonful of gasoline. It merely confines the poor motorist to spending his allowance on little runs, which in his opinion are less worth while than the longer trip which he is not allowed to take. Even where he is wrong there is not any loss of gasoline or rubber resulting from his choice. And he may often be right. I know of two desired trips North to a cooler summer climate. For a person old or in feeble health such a trip is almost a matter of life or death. It must be a terrible responsibility to forbid such trips wholesale for no real gain at all.

A similar threat is that motorists who do not use all their gasoline within a time limit be given less next time. A more effective way to discourage gasoline saving would be hard to find. It is almost penalizing patriotism. W. P. W.

Constructing A Suit

The doorbell rang. It was Elise who was at the door.

"Come in," quoth I.

She peered about the living room strewn with dress materials, pinking shears, pins, tape measure and yardstick, pieces of pattern.

"Ah," said Elise, "Madame is constructing a dress"

"'Making' a dress," I said automatically. Elise's French kept stumbling over her English and she had asked me as a favor to correct her whenever her English was in error.

"Not 'constructing' a dress, Elise; 'making' one," I repeated.

"Ah, but no, Ma-hree, here I must differ with you. A real dressmaker constructs a dress; she does not merely make it!"

"Sounds like building a bridge," I protested.

"There! You have exactly struck it! It is the same mathematical problem. The engineer has his mathematics and you have yours. For example, what is it that you think when you think of building a bridge?"

I thought a moment of building a bridge.

"Stress and strain," I said finally. "Soothing alliteration . . ."

"Well, let us take stress and strain. Alliteration—I do not know that. But stress and strain: do you not have this same problem in constructing a dress?"

I looked doubtful. Elise went on quickly.

"For example. You are putting in the sleeve? An excellent example! Is there not much strain at the sleeves and do you not solve the problem mathematically? Do you not ease the material here and gather it there according to certain principles so that the strain will be distributed evenly?"

I nodded.

"And so does the engineer," continued Elise. "The only difference is that your mathematics is intuitive—truly a finer quality of mathematics. You work in fabrics and he works in steel. But you must each know the characteristics of your materials: what it will do in different atmospheric conditions, how to fit it together at various angles, where to provide it with free play and where to anchor it taut."

Elise sat back with an enthusiastic sparkle in her eye. She thought of something else and leaned forward again.

"And angles, that is another thing. You must be well versed in geometry in order to construct a dress successfully," she declared.

"Plane or solid?" I asked.

Elise thought carefully.

"Solid, I should say. But a bit of plane, too," she said. "And the calculus: that, too, is useful in constructing a dress."

"All I remember of calculus," I retorted, "is that problem about 'given a piece of tin of certain dimensions, in what proportions is a tin can to be made in order to obtain maximum volume.'"

"Well, but don't you see, Ma-hree?"

"No, I don't," I said stubbornly.

"But you have the same problem often in constructing a dress, except that you work with fabric and not tin," persisted Elise.

"And I am making me a dress and not a tin can," I reminded.

We both sat and mused the proposition. A light glimmered in the recesses of my memory.

"You know, Elise, I think that what you have said explains the sixth grade dresses at last. I never did understand that debacle till now."

"Tell me about it, Ma-hree."

"I'm going to. In sixth grade we all had to study domestic science. The boys took manual training and the girls were taught cooking and sewing. The first thing we made were quilted potholders. It took everyone three weeks to make them. From potholders we went to dresses. I brought linen for mine—real linen. It was orange."

"How awful!" exclaimed Elise.

"It took us the rest of the term to finish the dresses. We all decided to appear in them on a certain day. And we all did, except Evelyn Barton—her mother wouldn't let her.

"You never saw such frights, Elise! Sleeves were put in backwards, pockets were sewn on crooked, hems dipped, cuffs were of unequal width, and by some subtle means some of the girls had achieved an effect of having their dresses on front side backward.

"Miss Fuesner, our sixth grade teacher, kept her handkerchief to her face most of the morning. At times she would choke and rush out of the room and we would hear peals of laughter coming in from the hall. Then she would reappear dabbing her eyes with a handkerchief."

"But of course!" cried Elise. "In sixth grade you have not had geometry yet——"

"No, not even eighth grade arithmetic," I added. "So how could we be expected to construct a dress properly when all we'd had was addition, subtraction, and had just barely learned the multiplication tables?"

"But of course not!" agreed Elise.

"And do you know," I went on, "that I did not construct a wearable dress until I was a junior in high school? The summer after I finished plane geometry in my sophomore year, I made a dress and there was such a tremendous improvement over the previous ones that everyone remarked on it."

"How wonderful!" exclaimed Elise.

"And by the time I was taking trigonometry and calculus, I was making my own suits and coats."

"There! You see?" said Elise triumphantly.

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

Is It Gawdsaking?

LIPPMANN

THERE IS no use complaining about things that can't be helped, and this is especially true in wartime. He who complains without pointing to a remedy falls into the class of those who Mr. H. G. Wells once described as the Gawdsakers because they go about wringing their hands, crying "For gawd's sake, let's do something." There has been inspired comment in the past fortnight which is meant to suggest that Gawdsakers are exerting the current pressure on the subject of shipping, submarines, and the whole critical and paramount problem of transportation and supply.

It may be useful, therefore, to present in an orderly way, though of course only in the broadest and barest outline, the problem, the diagnosis, and the immediate steps which are judged to be necessary in order to develop the remedy.

LET US summarize the problem. Cargo ships are being sunk faster than they are being built. Axis submarines are being produced and commissioned faster than we are sinking them. Our regular naval forces, that is to say light cruisers and carriers and destroyers, are engaged in vital operations in the Pacific and in the North Atlantic. Our production of escort and patrol vessels, less powerful than destroyers but sufficient for convoy and antisubmarine duty, is late, is slow, and is inadequate.

NOW for the diagnosis and the remedial steps. Since the supply of shipping is short and in peril, it is indispensable that shipping be mobilized for essentially military purposes, that no ships be wasted on inessential or inefficient voyages, and that no ships be risked except where the voyage is of high military value.

This required a separation, within the authority exercised by Admiral Land, of shipbuilding from ship operation. It has been done. Authority over shipbuilding has been delegated to Admiral Vickery, and over ship operation to Mr. Lewis W. Douglas. There was needed also the unreserved acceptance of two principles. One is that we are not now operating a merchant marine but a system of military supply. The other is that the ships of the United Nations, constitute a common pool and are no longer to be regarded as competing merchant marine companies. The acceptance of these principles is implied in Admiral Land's choice of Mr. Douglas.

SECOND, since adequate standard naval forces are not now available on the Atlantic Coast and in the Caribbean, there is needed a mobilization of improvised vessels and of aircraft for patrol, escort, and rescue. The best that can be said here is that there is some light on the horizon and that the dawn is breaking. The command in the Gulf has been given to an officer who has been fighting submariner from Iceland. There are some other evidences of action and there are prospects of action.

But they are insufficient, and the reason they are insufficient is that in the Navy Department and in the shore stations, the hard cake of bureaucratic routine has not yet given way to bold initiative, determined improvisation, and inspiring leadership. Departmental ideas of what ships can be used, of what training and qualifications the seamen must have, of what cannot be done with the means available—all these ideas are very strong, and they do not yield easily. So it is difficult to see how the dead hand of routine is to be lifted without the selection of a chieftain of commanding personality and with iron authority for the purpose of this campaign over the bureaus in Washington and the subbureaus along the coast.

THIRD, since the sumbarine is defeating and indeed nullifying the production of the shipyards, it is necessary to reexamine our merchant and naval building program. It may be necessary to take a very important decision, namely to combine the two programs in such a way that the production of escort ships will catch up with the production of merchant ships, and then keep pace with it.

There is no use building ships in 60 days for the Germans to sink in 12 minutes; there is no use building ships without providing the means to protect them. The lives of the sailors are too precious and the lost cargoes are too expensive for us to accept the prodigal's delusion of thinking we can make more ships than the enemy can destroy.

IN THIS FIELD, we find that the facilities for building merchant ships are now greater than the supply of materials. We find also that the facilities for building naval escort ships, including small aircraft carriers, are less than the visible need for such ships.

If we look further into the problem we find that the merchant shipyards have developed their great facilities because in many of them the principles of mass production have been brilliantly followed. We find also that in the Navy Department ship construction has not yet been adapted to mass production, though escort vessels and small carriers are intrinsically very well suited to mass production.

THE REMEDY would seem to be, then, to turn to Admiral Vickery and have him use some part of his shipbuilding facilities and some of the shipbuilders he has so happily discovered, to make escorts and small carriers for the Navy.

It is hard to see any reasonable objection to this proposal. It would provide the Navy with mass producers of ships that the Navy needs to have produced in massive numbers. Moreover, by bringing merchant and naval construction into a combined program there is good reason for thinking that steel could be allocated and then used more efficiently. For it is believed that if Mr. Nelson and the WPB had the means of knowing all the time when, where, and how all the steel is actually being used, there would be more steel for ships than there now appears to be.

THIS THEN is a summary of what I have been able to learn, and sift out and put together, after fairly persistent inquiries. It is a consensus of what I have gathered from a good many professionally competent and thoroughly informed men who must be nameless.

The statement of the problem will not, I think, be disputed nor will the diagnosis. The remedies outlined are of course debatable. But note that they have been kept rigorously above the level of technology, of naval tactics, of operational plans, and of course of all information not known to the enemy which could be of use to him.

They are, in other words, remedies at the level where men of sound judgment and of a ripe experience in government not only can but should feel competent to form opinions. When they do, and when they make themselves heard, we shall take the necessary measures and we shall get ourselves set to win the battle of transportation.

Air Conference

By Janet R. Keith

No Effective Results

THE AIR CONFERENCE of the United Nations, which met at Ottawa to discuss air training, tactics and strategy, finished its business in less than a week. What was accomplished at its secret sessions we shall never know. Possibly it was a great deal. What was revealed at press conferences as the outward result of the parley is disappointing.

Delegates from 14 of the Allied nations attended the conference. It was heralded as one of the most important conferences of the entire war. Aviation experts predicted overall streamlining of air crew production on this continent, with large-scale pooling of recruits and absolute standardization of training methods.

APPARENTLY that was far too much to expect. The only tangible result of the conference announced so far is the agreement to form a combined committee for air training in North America. Committee members, who will represent the United Kingdom, United States and Canada, have not yet been appointed. The functions of the committee will be purely advisory. It may discuss questions of training standardization and effective use of training facilities in North America and "submit agreed recommendations to the appropriate authorities."

Other governments concerned with air training in North America may appear before the committee "whenever there are questions of interest to be discussed." Representatives from nations other than United Kingdom, United States and Canada may attend sessions in the capacity of observers.

The setting up of this committee is a step forward, but it falls far short of what it could have been. Even the layman mistrusts "advisory committees." Is there not a crying need for an air council of the United Nations, with representatives from every country, and the power to act on every air question from elementary training to grand strategy? Is there still time, in this lightning war, for an advisory committee which meets with representatives of certain governments "when questions of interest arise?" Those who hoped that the machinery of global air strategy would emerge from the conference have reason to be disappointed.

Many authorities predicted a pooling of air training facilities on this continent as a result of the conference. Apparently that, too, was a plan which is not to be realized. Canada and the United States would certainly benefit from a system of pooled air training, with each country specializing in a certain phase of training and sending recruits back and forth across the border.

Right at the moment Canada has facilities for training more air crew recruits than the number readily available in the dominion. At the same time, United States has a surplus of potential recruits over completed training facilities. The air training plan in operation in Canada wasn't built in proportion to Canada's small population; it was built to take care of the air training needs of the British Commonwealth: United Kingdom, Australia, New Zealand and Canada. It took two years and a billion dollars to put the plant into full operation. Now it is going full blast, geared to train nearly four times the 18-to-25-year-old recruits available in Canada, capable of being doubled or tripled in size without difficulty.

MEANWHILE the air forces of the United States have set an objective of multiplying personnel from less than 400,000 today to one million by the end of this year and over two million by the end of 1943. At the end of last year production of pilots in the United States was at the rate of 12,000 a year; by the end of next year it must have reached the rate of 140,000. Man power will probably not be a problem, but training facilities may be. It takes time to build airports, train instructors and put a gigantic training scheme into operation.

If the United States were to send at least a part of her Army Air Corps recruits to Canada for elementary flying training, it would give her a breathing spell during which to get the rest of her plant constructed. At the same time Canada could send graduates of the commonwealth plan to serve as instructors or to man American planes serving with United States forces.

This pooling of air crew would necessitate complete standardization of training methods, but that could be achieved without much disruption. Already the systems used on this continent are very similar. The Fleet Finches and Tiger Moths used for elementary trainers used in Canada resemble closely the Stearman trainers used in some United States elementary training schools. North American trainers and Cessna "Cranes" are used in advance training on both sides of the line. Both countries are now giving pilots about 200 air hours.

There appears to be ample evidence that the United Nations would benefit from a pooling of air crew on this continent. Yet for the present the idea has been discarded. "There will be no United Nations pool of air crewmen," said Maj. Gen. Barton K. Yount of the United States after the conference. "We don't feel it would be in the interests of efficiency to have indiscriminate mixing of air crews. Each nation feels it would do better work if it maintains its own national identity and fights under its own command."

Why this sudden emphasis on national identity? Australian and New Zealand airmen don't seem to have suffered from "indiscriminate mixing" with Canadians and Englishmen in the schools of the joint training plan. Squadrons of the R. C. A. F. have fought right from the first under the command of the R. A. F. British squadrons are fighting now under the Russian command. Granted that men like to fight in squadrons composed of their own countrymen, they would surely not object to serving under the command of other Allied nations.

Canada's Air Minister C. G. Power may have inadvertently touched a sore point when he made a press statement at the beginning of the conference. "An Inter-Allied air force, based on standardization of planes and training technique, was an ideal to work toward," he admitted, "but among the obstacles to such an achievement was the problem of national prestige." If the "problem of national prestige" was forgotten during the secret session, much may have been accomplished. If it weren't forgotten, there is no need to wonder why the outward results are disappointing.

Wartime Washington

By Merlo Pusey

Government Under Muzzle

WHEN the District Commissioners sent their proposed public welfare bill to Capitol Hill the other day it had lain dormant in the Budget Bureau for two months and ten days. The Budget Bureau didn't even change a comma. When that agency got around to reading the proposal it discovered the obvious—that the bill has no bearing on any national legislation. So it sent the measure back to the Commissioners without any comment for or against it.

PUSEY

Now it may appear, since the Budget Bureau did not exercise its veto power against this particular proposal, that no harm was done. But time is a factor in government just as it is in business and in life itself. The difference between bungling and efficient government is often marked by the time it takes public officials to act on issues of either minor or major importance. When a local Government dealing directly with the people has to await the convenience of an outside agency having no responsibility to the city, it doesn't have a reasonable chance to render efficient service.

In this instance the overworked Budget Bureau took from March 17 to May 27 to inform the Commissioners that it has no interest in a local bill. It might have held the proposal indefinitely. Or it could have smothered the bill in disfavor simply by concluding that it did not conform to the President's legislative program. In cases where the Budget Bureau exercises its blackball powers the Commissioners are forbidden to advocate the proposal or even to send it to Congress without an accompanying statement to the effect that the Administration frowns upon it. The effect is to put a muzzle on the Commissioners and allow them to speak out for the District only when they have the tardy approval of the Budget Bureau.

THE ABSURDITY of this arrangement has often been pointed out. It means unconscionable delay in getting local legislation before Congress. It places an official censor between the city's administrative heads and its legislative council, namely Congress. Several years ago the Budget Bureau came to recognize its incompetence to pass upon the details of the District's annual budgets. It now forwards the Commissioners' budgets to Congress without change, unless at some point national interests loom up in the local estimates. There is much less reason for the Budget Bureau, strictly a Federal agency, to pass upon local legislation. Yet every District bill must be forced through this bottleneck before it reaches Congress.

The Commissioners would be amply justified in making a determined fight against this muzzling policy. Instead, they have adopted a muzzling policy of their own. An order by the city fathers dated May 1 forbids department heads of the local government to carry on any discussion of projects for improvement of municipal service when the Commissioners have finally closed the door against such suggestions. The most significant paragraph of the order reads as follows:

That any matter recommended by a department head which is acted on adversely by the Commissioners will be considered closed and department heads will not further agitate or discuss the matter either within or without the District government, officially or unofficially, except as noted hereafter.

The exceptions referred to permit an appeal in writing to the Commissioners. If the appeal is turned down, the department head may petition the Commissioners for the privilege of submitting his request direct to Congress. Presumably the Commissioners reserve to themselves the right of rejecting such requests, which is not unreasonable. There must be a certain amount of centralized control over requests for local legislation sent to Congress by District officials. That is not the most disturbing aspect of the muzzle which the Commissioners have devised for department heads under their supervision.

When once the Commissioners have taken a stand on an issue, the tongues of department heads are tied, except as they may be loosened by an act of grace. If Major Kelly puts in a bid for a hundred additional policemen and is turned down by the Commissioners, presumably he will thereafter be forbidden to discuss that proposal with his subordinates. Certainly he could not discuss it with newspapermen without risk of incurring the "disciplinary measures" referred to in the order.

If the director of public welfare should ask for a new jail or training school and be turned down by the Commissioners, he would thereafter be forbidden to discuss that subject with interested citizens who might call at his office. This is censorship with a vengeance. The tendency will be to discourage public discussion of civic improvements and better community service. For the men who know most about the city's specific requirements will be muzzled.

LAST YEAR the Commissioners' weakness for censorship came to the fore when they decided to withhold from the public the budgetary requests of department heads. They hastened to reverse that decision when subjected to a barrage of criticism. Perhaps that is why the order of May 1 was put out quietly without public announcement. Now that the order has been brought to public attention, however, vigorous protests may be anticipated.

If there is any one city in the world where there ought to be an especially free discussion of municipal issues it is Washington. Freedom of speech and of the press is the chief principle of democracy now in evidence in this disfranchised city. Without widespread discussion of policies adopted or rejected by the Commissioners there is no way of knowing the will of the people, to say nothing of giving it effect. And it goes without saying that expert department heads must participate in this discussion if it is to have any background of accurate facts and informed opinion.

What is in the minds of the administrative rulers of Washington? Are they afraid for Congress and the people to know the facts? Actually, of course, no one should be surprised at this muzzling of officials all up and down the line. Where democracy ceases to exist, as it did in the District back in 1874, the muzzle invariably becomes a chief instrument of government. The extension of its use here ironically suggests that the Capital is slipping deeper into dictatorial confusion even while it is the center of the fight for world freedom.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

'In Perfect Shape'

"Potiphar is in splendid condition," said Mrs. Frawbish at the dinner table, as she petted her overstuffed Airedale, a pooch so overfed that he seemed to have been upholstered in the Victorian era. "I'm very careful of his diet."

She fed him a piece of steak and apologized.

"I can't help yielding to him once in a while," she said. "He looks at me so pleadingly. He all but talks, you know. Potiphar, get down! You know you mustn't beg at the table. Down! Down! Down! Oh, all right, just a wee bit of mashed potato, and then no more. He's so easy to train."

Mrs. Frawbish slipped him some potato a little furtively.

"I really am very careful of his diet," she went on. "That's why his coat looks so good. Look at the expression; he almost talks. He wants a piece of bread. I never let him have bread. It's very bad for him. Look at him begging for it."

"Now, that's all," she said. "It isn't good for little doggies to eat too much. Down!"

Potiphar got down, but reappeared on the other side of her.

"He smells the mushrooms," lisped Mrs. Frawbish, and slipped him a portion of mushroom, the dog almost snapping her index finger off with it. "Now go away. You mustn't beg at the table."

Potiphar made no move.

"It's really hard to keep a dog like Potiphar in such good shape," said Mrs. Frawbish. "You've got to be firm." She let him have some turnip. "I never coddle him. It's for his own good. They get out of condition so quickly if you don't watch their diet."

Potiphar whined.

"I'll give him just the crusty part of the bread dipped in a little gravy just this once," she said. She proceeded to do so.

"What? Well, he would have 'em, I suppose, if I didn't watch his diet. He had 'em last month, and the doctor said he would be all right if I didn't overfeed him. I've been careful not to ever since."

Potiphar pawed at her lap.

"He smells the dessert," said Mrs. Frawbish, patting his head. "But he knows he can't have any. He's such an easy dog to train. So obedient."

Whereupon she broke up a piece of whipped cream cake and let Potiphar grab it.

"He almost talks," she said as the dog climbed into her lap and demanded another piece. "Down!" said Mrs. Frawbish, letting him have another piece.

Potiphar now slid out of her lap through sheer helplessness. He had developed a pronounced list to starboard. Now he sat there on the floor, his head sagging. He was in obvious discomfort.

"He acts like that when he wants coffee," she said. "I trained him to do that." She poured some coffee into a saucer and put it on the floor. Potiphar took a sip and rolled over.

"Have a nut," said Mrs. Frawbish as she threw him a salted almond.

The pooch now lay flat on his back. He seemed quite dead. In fact, he was.

"Isn't he in amazing condition?" asked Mrs. Frawbish. "Look! He's had enough, and he's telling me so. He's so easy to train!"

Nonsense About Our War Aims

THIS NONSENSE about the war aims of the United States is beginning to get out of control, so, before we become a lot of confirmed political hopheads, walking around in a dream of international and interracial fellowship and love, it should be stated with such force as to snap us out of our daze that the fighters and people of the United States are at war for the sole purpose of defending the country from a combination of enemies who touched off the fight by a treacherous attack under cover of protestations of friendship.

PEGLER

That is all there is to it.

When the war is over the United States had better continue to exclude Asiatics, except under very careful restrictions, because experience has shown that they work harder and live on less than we can and tend to colonize, monopolize and drive native Americans out of our own American areas. We found that out a long time ago, and we will get ourselves in a fix if we don't have the courage to say that this is going to be a white man's country with the sole exception in favor of the 13 million Negroes among us who are here because our ancestors brought their ancestors here. This was a very great wrong, as the leading Negroes agree, and we can only try to work out agreeable relations with the colored men who are all native Americans and, in all respects, belong.

EVEN if the Asiatics would let us, we just wouldn't migrate to their countries in any numbers, whereas they would come here in overwhelming and highly prolific swarms. But we should be able to handle that during the emotional period by stopping all immigration, including the European, which, incidentally, in the years since the other war, has been very bad, because it brought over hordes of continental no-damn-goods who didn't like anything at home but don't like anything here either because we don't adopt their European ideas. The result is that this Nation, which was founded as a New Deal and refuge for white Europeans who were glad to put Europe behind them forever, has been infected with the very poisons which produced the present condition in Europe and has, unconsciously, turned back to Europe for advice and example.

I am more firmly than ever convinced that full citizenship should not be granted to immigrants and that they should not be eligible for public office—a provision which we could adopt within our right and with apologies to nobody. This might discourage immigration, but the club rolls are full up now and we need time to settle some strictly domestic affairs which, incidentally, would not be nearly so bad if they had not been complicated with suggestions from Europeans, or native Americans who look to Europe for their thoughts.

TO THE OBJECTION that such a rule would have deprived us of the services of Senator Bob Wagner and Felix Frankfurter my answer is that their contributions to our present state of affairs are some that I have in mind in offering the suggestion.

Many Europeans think they do things rather well in Russia, but the only reason they can't go to Russia is that Russia does things just so well that immigration and suggestions from outsiders as to how she should run her domestic affairs both are rejected. Russia will not be letting down the bars to immigration after the war, and it takes no prophet to foresee that the new Chinese nation, strong and proud in victory and wise and hard in the ways of war, will put up with no more superior nonsense from the pink people. China will be China for the Chinese and their leaders are no such fools as to think that the United States has any intention to act out this brotherhood scenario in our own country, so why should we kid ourselves?

I notice that Russia is keeping a very level head about her objectives. Russia is fighting to kick the ears off a hated enemy who attacked her, and for no other reason, and yet we who also were attacked in the same treacherous way, drool on about freedoms and brotherhood, everywhere in the world, as though we had to find some sentimental excuse to fight for our very lives.

Sub's Inventor Busy On Plan To Offset Menace Of U-Boat

By the Associated Press

Pottstown, Pa., June 1.—Simon Lake disclosed today that he is at work on another invention—designed, ironically, to offset the menace of his most famous creation, the submarine.

The white-haired, 75-year-old inventor came here to perfect a new type of concrete pipe, able to withstand terrific internal pressure, which could be used in cross-country lines to carry oil and gasoline to any part of the Nation.

Lake believes his brain-child would save thousands of tons of steel in the construction of pipelines such as that now being considered by Congress to relieve the Eastern States gasoline shortage due largely to submarine-torpedoing of tankers.

Details of Lake's newest invention have not been made public because they are considered of military significance. However, it can be said that it is being tested by a large commercial producer.

Lake, who dreamed of the submarine as a major merchant carrier, rather than an instrument of destruction, still is convinced that hugo cargo undersea boats would be the answer to the Nation's shipping problem.

"The only way to combat the submarine is with another submarine," he said, "and a cargo submersible would be the answer."

"A military submarine would differ greatly from a huge cargo-carrying submarine and there still are many ways that a military submarine can be improved.",

He already has conferred with builders about construction of these supersubs, capable of carrying cargoes up to 7500 tons, or as many as 2500 troops.

This giant undersea craft, he said, would be about 400 feet long and displace about 12,000 tons, nearly twice as large as the 6600-ton U-boat which the Nazis reportedly have in use supplying troops in Libya. Its cost he estimates at around three million dollars, considerably less than that of an armed fighting sub.

Chicago Teacher Succeeds Thomas As No. 1. Socialist

Milwaukee, June 1 (AP).—Dr. Maynard C. Krueger, University of Chicago economics professor, was elected national chairman of the Socialist Party today, succeeding Norman Thomas, the party's candidate for President in four campaigns and national chairman since 1936. Thomas declined to serve again. Krueger was the party's vice presidential nominee in 1940.

The convention, in a measure adopted by a 105 to 15 vote, asserted that the Socialist Party "does not give its blessing to this war or any war," maintaining that "a social order that is producing fascism cannot destroy it."

Senate Backs Bigger Pensions

The Senate yesterday joined the House in voting a $10 increase to $40 in the monthly compensation for veterans of the first World War with non-service-connected total and permanent disabilities, but refused a general pension for veterans on reaching 65.

The increase in compensation for disabled veterans would restore such payments to the figure prevailing prior to the 1933 economy act, would benefit about 80,000 persons, and would cost the Government about $2,500,000 a year.

The general pension proposal, which was opposed by Frank T. Hines, administrator of veterans affairs, would affect about 15,000 persons if enacted now and would cost below $7,500,000 the first year. Hines contended, however, that since the average age of World War veterans is 51 now, the cost of the general pension would amount to more than 300 million dollars annually in a few years.

Meanwhile Senator La Follette (Progressive), Wisconsin, announced that he would try to force a Senate vote Thursday on the question of making $50 a month the minimum pay in the armed force.

La Follette told the Senate that he would press a motion to discharge the Senate conference committee which, in meetings with a similar House group, has held out for $42. The latter figure was approved by the Senate, but the House boosted it to $50. The Senate-House committee was then appointed to work out a compromise.

All States Join In Removing Barriers Impeding War Goods

Secretary of Commerce Jesse Jones announced yesterday that all of the 48 State Governments have put minimum trucking and reciprocal license regulations into immediate effect to facilitate the movement of war materials over the Nation's highways.

Jones explained that ten days ago a committee of governors received from Federal officials a list of the minimum regulations desirable, and promised to make whatever changes were necessary within ten days.

Some States already had more liberal regulations and did not have to make changes, but about two-thirds did make changes, Jones explained.

The minimums asked by the Federal Government permit weights ranging from 18,000 pounds on a single axle up to 40,000 pounds on three axles. They also permit truck widths up to 96 inches and heights up to 12½ feet; and lengths up to 35 feet for a single vehicle or 45 feet for a combination truck and trailer.

Jones said the action of the Governors "is an outstanding example of what a united nation can do in an emergency."

Frank Bane, representative of the States, explained that the governors all found that they could act by use of emergency powers and without waiting for legislative sessions.

He added that on some highways weak bridges may prevent the carrying of the proposed loads, but State highway police will route trucks to stronger bridges.

He also explained that the reciprocal license arrangement will mean that any truck carrying papers identifying its cargo as war material will be able to go from State to State without buying the license plates frequently required at each State border.

Still Opposed To Sales Taxes, Says Morgenthau

Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau at a press conference yesterday again slapped out at the sales tax by flatly opposing any increase in the tax burden on "the little fellow" beyond the stiff taxes already recommended by the Treasury.

Morgenthau, who has recommended taxes aggregating $8,700,000,000, indicated the House Ways and Means Committee is now about two billion dollars short of that total.

"There is talk of compulsory war bond purchases and sales taxes to make up what they are behind," said the Treasury Secretary. "I hope they will not make it up on the low-income people."

The Ways and Means Committee meanwhile temporarily passed over consideration of new excise taxes recommended by Morgenthau to perfect some administrative changes in the tax law. Informed members said action on excise recommendations was postponed for routine tax-drafting reasons, and was in no way significant of what action might later be taken.

Indifference To Diet Causes Many Ills

Only One-Fourth Of Americans Eat Properly

By Ida Jean Kain

INDIFFERENCE, ignorance and economics—and in that exact order—are the reasons only one-fourth of the American people eat properly.

Most are willing to concede that spinach is good for them but they won't eat it. They think it is strictly for vegetarians and in the same class as vegetable plates and whole wheat bread.

They know that milk has something in it that is needed for their teeth—but they won't drink it seriously until threatened with a store set. They will drink their orange juice if it is all squeezed and put on the table before them. But they wouldn't lift a finger to prepare it for themselves.

Indifferent Eating

Such indifference probably applies to half of those who do not eat right. All they want in food is to have it taste good and be filling and not too fattening.

This indifference is due partly to ignorance. Their malnutrition is not so pronounced that it bothers them and they go right along on their hit-and-miss menus until some deficiency or other becomes too marked to be ignored.

Today there is no excuse for not knowing why foods are important and which ones are needed daily. In fact, with the national swing over to nutrition, it is difficult to see how you can escape knowing quite a lot about right eating.

Charm Through Food

All the nutritionists are right on your tracks. If we can't scare you into proper respect for food, we try to tempt you with the promise of what it can do for you—which is plenty! Did you know that it can keep you mentally as well as physically efficient, tone you up and calm you down, and do as much for your personality as a course in charm? Calcium—that's what you get in milk and cheese—can do all that for you in addition to helping you hang on to your teeth. And that's only one of the essentials. You need them all, for all have important roles.

If you lack the money to buy good nutrition, that is something else, but the more you know about the subject, the closer you can come to getting your money's worth. You can buy better meals with less money. An inexpensive meal that measures up to all the requirements for good nutrition is this: soy beans, whole wheat bread, enriched margarine, dandelion greens, stewed tomatoes and a glass of milk.

Women Can Do War Jobs at Home

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin

Many of us, deep in the busy routine of family life, may sometimes feel that we're not really contributing as much as we'd like to the national war effort. But our stake in that vital peace of the future will be valiant sons and daughters who can help realize the dream of the world the men of today are fighting for. That's our even-more-important-than-usual part in the national effort.

But there are some immediate war jobs that we can do in our homes in the interests of salvage and conservation. Though the stores still have brave and gay arrays of things to sell, the fact is that much of this merchandise cannot be replaced when present stocks are sold. Women's responsibility in these grim days is to make what we have last and "do." Here are a few tips for taking care of our possessions:

Care of Furnishings

Blankets—Have them dry cleaned or else wash them at home with love and tenderness before putting them away. Then sprinkle well with moth crystals or spray them with a moth compound and wrap in paper with opening sealed or else store in a moth-proof chest or box.

Upholstered Furniture—Have drooping springs or bulging stuffing repaired as soon as you discover that they're slipping. Keep the entire piece well cleaned with your vacuum cleaner. Spray at intervals to protest against moths, and don't forget to get into all the cracks. To fumigate upholstered furniture infested with moths, make an opening in the cover at the back or bottom. Sprinkle all the cracks of the furniture with moth crystals. Fill the spray jar or your vacuum with moth crystals and insert the end of hose to the opening of chair or sofa. Pull cleaner up close to furniture. Cover the whole thing with double blankets, then with newspapers taped together or with a large paper bag made of wrapping paper taped together. Whatever you use should be practically airtight so make sure that paper or blankets reach the floor and spread out enough to weight them down with books. Turn on the vacuum and let it run an hour to vaporize a half pound of moth crystals or two hours to vaporize a pound of crystals. Do not uncover for two days.

Rugs—Have cleaned professionally if you can afford it—otherwise use a reliable shampoo preparation yourself. If rugs are to be put away for the summer, sprinkle generously with para crystals, roll and wrap tightly in heavy paper and seal the cracks with gummed tape and store in a dry place. Rugs that will not fade can be sprayed thoroughly with a moth spray. Do not use a broom on good rugs. A carpet sweeper for daily cleaning and a vacuum for occasional cleaning will keep them in good shape. Dirt embedded in the pile causes much extra wear.

Curtain Washing

Nylon Curtains—Wash in mild suds and lukewarm water. Don't soak. Don't rub. Don't wring. Squeeze the suds out and rinse in lukewarm water. Roll in a bath towel till excess water is absorbed. They won't need to be ironed.

Rayon or Celanese Curtains—Wash as you do nylon but iron with a warm—never hot—iron.

Linoleum—Keep well waxed, then you'll find it easier to clean and more long-wearing. Often a dry mopping will be all that's necessary between times. Scrub only when really dirty and then with a mild soap.

Electric Iron—Let the iron cool before removing starch with soap and a damp rag. Don't let water get in the iron. Don't yank plug out by the cord . . . this warning applies to the use of all electric appliances.

Tufted Bedspreads—If you wash them in the washer, put them in a bag made of an old lace curtain or a pillowcase in order to protect the tufts from getting pulled.

Silver—Wash as soon after using as possible and dry while still warm. Don't bang together and never let hollow handled knives soak in water.

Piano—Wipe keys with cloth dampened with water in which a little borax has been dissolved. Dry thoroughly with soft dry cloth. Have piano tuned twice a year. Place small bags of para crystals in the case to protect felt pads against moths.

Awnings—Keep awnings open till dry . . . pulling them up when damp may cause mildew or rot. Faded awnings can be renewed with a new awning paint that actually preserves the canvas.

After Girl's Divorce Paves Way to Marrying Man She Loves, He Gives Her Run-Around; She Believes He Loves Her Still; So Why Does He Act This Way?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am deeply in love with a young man I met two years ago. At the time we met, I was going with another man; but we started dating twice a week and I soon became very fond of him. He (I shall call him Jim) was in love with me, but I continued to go about with the other man; and Jim had other girls. Although we didn't refer to our other "dates," Jim knew I was being courted by the other man, who is a member of a very well-to-do family and had given me several expensive gifts.

Jim made a very good salary, but it couldn't compare with the other man's income, and when we went out I never suggested going any place beyond his means. He began comparing his financial status with the other man's, and remarked several times that he could never do for me what the other man could. I explained that I wasn't interested in either man from the financial viewpoint, because my family has always lived more or less contentedly on the proverbial shoestring, and I have worked for my living since I was quite young. Furthermore, I had made an early marriage, and was separated from my husband for about five years when Jim and I met.

Jim is now in the Army, but before he left for camp, we had talked of getting married when I had my divorce. Such conversations would always end with his saying how much he loved and wanted me; but could never do for me what the other man could. For a time, he was in camp near here, and on several occasions I sent him money for transportation home. Later, he was transferred to a distant camp,—too far away for him to come here on weekends; so I haven't seen him for several months. However, we continued to correspond until a few weeks ago.

In one of my letters, I mentioned that I had obtained my divorce; but made no reference to our getting married. In reply, he wrote that this looked like the beginning of the end; that since I had my divorce, I probably would be getting married soon; and if he kept writing until then, he would be hurt too much. He said during the two years he had known me, he had wanted me more than life; but always knew he could not have me; and that I was not to feel sorry for him, as that would only make matters worse. In closing, he said he would always love me.

After receiving this letter, I wrote him that I was in love with him and never had any intention of marrying the other man, even though I still saw him and liked him as a friend. Two weeks passed, without a reply. Then I wrote to ask if his silence meant he did not care to continue the correspondence. To this he responded with a very nasty letter, saying he didn't care to write any more; that he hated every girl he had ever known, but especially me; and that he had only been interested in me for the money he thought he could get from me; and that his previous letter had been meaningless.

Miss Haworth, I cannot believe this. His reference to money is absurd. I gave him so little, and have so little to give, that it doesn't make sense. I am positive that he is very much in love with me; but believes if we were to marry I would eventually regret it, after having known another man who could have "provided" for me more handsomely. This, however, would never be true. Do you think, as I do, that he is trying to make me dislike him so that I will marry the other man?

I very much need and would appreciate your advice. While I do not intend to reply to his latest letter, I feel sure I will hear from him again, saying how sorry he is for what he wrote. Two or three times in the past, he has made similar statements; and shortly thereafter sent me lovely gifts, asking my forgiveness and denouncing himself for his attitude. Is it best to try to forget him altogether? Or should I overlook his rudeness and heal the rift, if given a chance? LYDIA.

Man Hoped the Girl Was Unattainable

DEAR LYDIA: The explanation of Jim's behavior is simply this: He doesn't want to get married. It has been amply demonstrated that not even his recurrently intense desire "to have and to hold" you can alter his fearsome "fixation" in that regard. Had he not found, in the well-to-do "other man's" presence in the picture, a self-defensive talking point, concerning alleged reasons why you were foolish to count on him as a husband,—you may be sure he would have conjured other anti-matrimonial arguments, equally plausible.

The fact that he doesn't want to get married probably drives him to play with the idea of getting married,—as a means of convincing himself that, after all, he's normal; he's not afraid to get married, etc. And he plays with the idea by permitting himself to fall in love with a girl who appears, at the start, to be out of reach. Thus, he "went for you," as the saying goes, because it looked at the outset as if he couldn't win. For one thing, you were legally and nominally another man's wife,—because, while you were separated from your husband, you were not divorced! For another thing, you were not exactly heart whole and fancy free. A faithful suitor was already in the running,—a suitor whose attentions you plainly indicated you wanted to keep. And, to give Jim final reassurance that his most importunate address could hardly be taken seriously, there was the impressive eligibility of his rival,—whose various credentials seemed sufficient to give him final victory over Jim, in a spirited competition.

Hence, his convincing early performance as wistful contender for your hand,—a performance which gradually gave way to melodramatic renunciation of the idea; to his reiterated statement that, "marriage for us can never be," as he discovered (to his dismay) that you were falling in love with him and would gladly marry him. And I daresay it was your progressive recognition of his essential (and to you unfathomable) elusiveness that precipitated your consuming ambition to be his wife. It is the old story of the out-of-reach apple seeming most desirable. Which is to say, you are by no means soulfully in love with him. It is only that his manifest determination to remain a bachelor has excessively provoked your acquisitive, possessive instincts,—until finally you have begun to feel that your happiness is dependent upon making him legally yours.

Judging him on the basis of his past performance, as herein set forth, he would be a poor bargain as a husband—even provided you could corral him, as obviously you cannot. He is neurotic and emotionally unstable, readily capable of vicious unkindness, involuntarily hostile to adult responsibilities, dishonest with himself and hence with others, and addicted to the most tawdry brand of vainglorious heroics, of the "Oh how I suffer!" sort, when evading a challenge to come clean or play fair.

His crude declaration that he courted your favor to mulct you of money is patent nonsense. He meant you to "see through it;"—he wanted you to think just what you had thought, namely: that he was trying to make you hate him, for your own good. However, his real concern is to make a safe getaway. But he would like to do it in such a manner that you never will cease burning incense to him, in some corner of your heart. I imagine his spells of contrition following hateful outbursts in the past were inspired more by a desire to correct the bad impression he left of himself, than to soothe pain inflicted upon you. In other words, his wish to revise the record was animated by vain self love, not tender regard for you.

Since this is my view of the situation, I suppose I need hardly emphasize my belief that your investment of interest in him has been a wasted investment from the start; and that you can expect only headache and heartache so long as you continue to cherish the futile hope of marrying him. In brief, therefore, and employing your own words, my advice is: "Forget him entirely." This cannot be accomplished overnight. A process of outgrowing is involved; and the process begins by deliberately fostering new interests in other persons. M. H.

Mother Love Held Keynote Of Child's Life

Mother love is the keynote of childhood happiness. The child who misses mother love is in danger of maladjustment. These statements were made by Dr. Erich Benjamin, research associate in psychiatry, at Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, Md., at the Eighth Institute on the exceptional child held under the auspices of the Child Research Clinic of the Woods School at Langhorne, Pa.

Dr. Benjamin recommended that the pediatrician and child psychiatrist must teach mothers that unselfish love and protection by his mother is the main consideration in the normal life of a small child. Dr. Benjamin gave particular attention to difficulties children have in adapting themselves to the community, to the early symptoms that point to the beginning of maladjustment, to the consequences of such a failure and how the child may be helped to find his way to the community. He discussed the critical period in the second or third year of childhood, and explained that at this time a child is inclined to say "No" to everything, and while the attitude lasts normally only a few months, it is at this point that children have serious difficulties and are in danger of becoming abnormally disturbed in their development.

"We must mention, however," said Dr. Benjamin, "that our statements apply only for a certain group of children. We are not allowed to generalize them by speaking of a typical development of all problem children. This type of children's development is to be found mostly among certain classes of the people. These classes enjoy good schooling and culture, they are frequently interested in art, theater, books, science and are in some ways representative of the high civilization of our time. Sometimes they live in better than marginal conditions or even in comfortable, often luxurious circumstances."

Duke and Duchess of Windsor Have Crowded Schedule on First Day of Current Visit; Every Effort Made to Soft-Pedal Publicity; Duke's Request

CROWDED BUT QUIET—negotiated, in fact, with a minimum of fanfare—was the first day's program for the current Capital visit of the Duke and Duchess of Windsor.

Here to discuss the welfare of the 68,903 residents of the Bahamas, the former King of England, accompanied by his American-born wife, stepped off the train at Union Station around 9 o'clock yesterday morning.

In contrast to the throng that greeted the couple on the same spot last September, yesterday's turnout of celebrity seekers and Windsor fans was small indeed . . . probably because the time of arrival had not been previously announced as for last autumn's visit. Furthermore, the train on which the couple traveled pulled into Union Station more than two hours behind schedule . . . and few persons in wartime Washington have time to wait that long, even for another glimpse of the one-time King and the former belle of Baltimore.

Apparently unaware that the duke and duchess were arriving were the throng of departing and incoming train patrons until someone cried out, "There goes the Prince of Wales!"

Heads turned quickly and within a few seconds a number of onlookers gathered around to see the official party warmly greeting the couple. In the group were British Minister Sir Ronald Campbell, acting for British Ambassador, Lord Halifax, who was at Ohio Wesleyan College to deliver an address; Stanley Woodward, the State Department's assistant chief of protocol; Humphrey Clarke, British Embassy secretary; and Rene McCall of the British Press Service. Accompanying the Windsors were the Scotland Yard detective, Sergt. Harry Holders; and Alistair Fletcher, the duke's valet.

A few minutes later the party was en route to the British Embassy, where the duke conferred with members of the Bahamas delegation, headed by Sidney Farrington.

'Family Party' at White House

"They went down to lunch at the White House at noon," is the way the release from the British Press Service disposed of the item indicating that President and Mrs. Roosevelt gathered in a small company for luncheon in honor of the duke and duchess.

"Just a family party" was the description a White House spokesman gave for the event, which, in contrast to most luncheons at the Executive Mansion, took place at 12 o'clock. Lady Halifax accompanied the duke and duchess to the luncheon. Others in the "family party" were Crown Princess Martha of Norway; Mr. and Mrs. Herman Rogers, of New York, who are old friends of the duke and duchess, and Harry Hopkins.

Duke of Windsor

Facing an abbreviated camera barrage at the door of the White House, the Governor of the Bahamas and his wife smiled and posed for pictures before going in. The duchess wore the same dark blue silk suit with horizontal red pin stripes that she had on when she arrived at Union Station; also, the same navy blue "beanie" and double strand pearl choker to blend with her cream doeskin gloves. However, she had donned a white blouse, instead of the red one she wore on arrival; and she had on a different pair of blue pumps.

The Governor of the Bahamas, who was a jaunty figure in a dove grey pin striped suit, set off with light tan suede shoes, when he stepped off the train, had on a dark blue suit and black shoes when he showed up at the White House.

Tea With Mrs. Joseph Davies

Following the luncheon, the duke returned immediately to the British Embassy to confer with Sir Owen Chalkley, Embassy Commercial Counselor. The duchess meanwhile visited "Aunt Bessie," Mrs. D. Buchanan Merryman, and later was a tea-time guest of Mrs. Joseph Davies.

A quiet dinner at the British Embassy rounded out the official schedule for the first day's visit. The Windsors are staying at the Embassy. Today, the duchess is scheduled to visit her native city in Baltimore, and she is expected to see her doctor at Johns Hopkins.

The Duke was scheduled to see a number of officials in Washington today, but it was announced early today that he was leaving for Nassau, presumably because of labor troubles there. The Duchess remained here.

Mr. and Mrs. Herman Rogers, who came down from New York specifically to see the duke and duchess, will return home today. They have been the house guests of Clarence Hewes.

Efforts of the British Press Service and the British Embassy to soft-pedal publicity regarding the visit are in keeping with requests made by the duke himself. The fact that the Windsors were entertained at the White House a few hours after their arrival would seem to quash any report that they are unwelcome guests in this Nation's Capital.

Sleeps in Lincoln Bed

A pretty girl, who received her diploma from the Madeira School yesterday, had the thrill of her life last night. She slept in the famous Lincoln bed at the White House.

The young lady is Miss Mary McAllister, daughter of Judge and Mrs. Thomas McAllister, of Grand Rapids, Mich. Her mother, who is better known in Washington as Dorothy McAllister, was formerly head of the women's division, Democratic National Committee, and she arrived in Washington a few days ago to see her daughter graduate. She has been staying at the White House and will be there a few more days.

Mrs. Thomas McAllister

Attractive and vivacious as ever—which is saying a lot—Mrs. McAllister looked as if she had stepped out of a bandbox when she dropped by a small luncheon yesterday at the Mayflower. Her biscuit brown suit was set off with a small dark brown hat, trimmed in rose—all very becoming to her brown eyes and hair and creamy complexion.

She frankly admitted that she has missed "the excitement of Washington" in the past few months, but that being with her family back in Grand Rapids was compensation enough. Before dashing off to her daughter's graduation, she lingered long enough to say that seeing the exercises would be doubly thrilling for her. "You see I was graduated from Madeira myself—away back in 1915," she added.

He and his wife have taken a house, 5704 Sixteenth Street, for the duration of their Capital stay. They have with them their two children, Rene and Olga, who are attending high school here. Their son, Lieut. Hugo Toro, is in this country studying cavalry technique at Fort Riley, Kans.

Mrs. Auchincloss, Col. Olds Obtain Marriage Permit

Col. Robert Olds, internationally famous as a tactician and handler of big military aircraft, yesterday made application here for a license to wed Mrs. Nina Gore Auchincloss, former wife of Hugh D. Auchincloss, Washington broker.

Colonel Olds, who has been married twice before, set a West-to-East record for military planes when he flew an Army B-17 bomber from Riverside, Calif., to Langley Field, Va., in 11 hours, one minute early in 1938.

He also commanded a good-will expedition of six Army planes to Buenos Aires in 1938 and headed a 12,000-mile flight to Rio de Janeiro in 1939.

For his accomplishments with military aircraft he was awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross and the Harmon Trophy and Medal in 1941. He has recently served as head of the Air Corps Ferrying Command.

Mrs. Auchincloss, daughter of former Senator Thomas Gore of Oklahoma, previously was the wife of Eugene Vidal, director of Air Commerce. She divorced him in Reno, Nev., in 1935, and afterward married the socially prominent Auchincloss, from whom she was divorced last September.

Gloria Grosvenor Becomes Bride of Torfinn Oftedal

In a simple ceremony in the spacious gardens of Wild Acres, her parent's Bethesda home, Miss Gloria Grosvenor became the bride yesterday afternoon of Torfinn Oftedal, Second Secretary of the Norwegian Embassy.

Only very close friends of the bride and bridegroom and of the family of the bride attended the 5 o'clock ceremony at which the Rev. Peter Marshall of the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church officiated. The bride is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Gilbert Grosvenor and Mr. Oftedal is the son of Mrs. Olav Oftedal of Sandes, Norway, and of the late Mr. Oftedal.

Spring flowers and roses formed the background for the ceremony, while a string quartet played nearby. The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a long-trained gown of white marquisette, made with two panels of lace down the back, a square neckline, and long, tight sleeves. Her full-length veil of tulle was held in place by a coronet of water lilies and she carried a bouquet of pastel water lilies. As her only ornament, she wore a pearl cross which her grandfather, Alexander Graham Bell, gave to his bride as a wedding gift.

The matron of honor, Mrs. Leonard Muller, a cousin of the bride from Coconut Grove, Fla., wore a shell pink marquisette dress made with a lace bodice, a high neck line and bishop sleeves. Her bouquet was of purple canterbury bells, yellow roses and white peonies, which matched the flowers in her hair.

Janet Ray Is Maid of Honor

The maid of honor, Miss Janet Ray, was dressed like the other honor attendant, and the bridesmaids, Miss Beverly Marshall and Miss Mannevillette Sullivan, wore similar frocks in apple green.

Sven Ofteday, a cousin of the bridegroom from Montreal, Canada, served as best man, and the ushers were Agnar Jonson, the Islandic Consul General in New York; Tor Stokke and Charles E. Sonoot.

Following the reception, the newlyweds left on a Northern honeymoon. As her traveling costume the bride wore a frock of orange plaid taffeta under a white wool coat. With it she wore a white hat, white accessories and a corsage of white orchids. After July 15, the couple will be at home at 4801 Connecticut Avenue.

The bride, who made her debut at Wild Acres in 1938, attended George Washington University, where she was a member of Alpha Delta Pi Sorority. Her husband was graduated from the University of Trondheim in Norway.

Mockbees Give Reception on Anniversary

Celebrating their fifteenth wedding anniversary, Mr. and Mrs. Harry E. Mockbee, jr., entertained last night at a reception at their home in Chevy Chase.

Hours set for the fete were from 8 to 11 o'clock and during that time close to 70 guests gathered to greet and congratulate the couple, who were married in Washington at the Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church 15 years ago. Mrs. Mockbee was the former Miss Gertrude Smallwood, and she was assisted in receiving the guests by her mother, Mrs. L. Vernon Smallwood.

Although the bridesmaids for the wedding have "drifted apart" to different sections of the country, Francis Farmer, who was Mr. Mockbee's best man, and Aubrey Crovo, who ushered, were among last night's guests. Dr. Frank Steelman, assisting minister at the wedding, was also present. Assisting the hostess at the tea table were Mrs. John William Smith of Roanoke, aunt of Mrs. Mockbee; Mrs. T. Brooke Amiss, aunt of Mr. Mockbee; and Mrs. Mabel Linton Williams.

Wickards Attend McArthur Party

The Secretary of Agriculture and Mrs. Claude Wickard were ranking guests at a Sunday evening party given by Mr. and Mrs. William McArthur at their home on Monticello Boulevard in Alexandria.

Guests gathered on the porch and in the living room of the McArthurs' new home between the hours of 5 and 8 o'clock. Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Evans, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Hutson and Mr. and Mrs. John B. Wilson, jr.

Dunn-Austin Ceremony Soon

Wedding bells will ring Friday for Miss Edith Austin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Austin of Chevy Chase, who will be married at 8 o'clock that evening at the Chevy Chase Presbyterian Church to Roderick Dunn, son of Mr. and Mrs. James Dunn of Marion, Mich.

A small reception at the bride's home will follow for close friends and relatives. Miss Austin has been honored at a number of parties during the weeks leading up to her wedding, among them a surprise shower last week given by Mrs. Iler James Fairchild. About 20 guests were present.

Two brides-to-be shared the honors at a party given recently by Miss Elizabeth White and Miss Alma Fogelberg. The latter, incidentally, will be Miss Austin's attendsnts Friday. Guest of honor at that fete with Miss Austin was Miss Lois Walton, who has chosen June 20 for the date of her marriage to Paul Bossch.

The ceremony will take place June 14 at the Williams home with the Rev. Allen Whittemore officiating. Mrs. William G. Crothers of Kingston, Ont., will be her sister's only attendant and Charles Langley will serve his brother as best man.

It's Early to Bed and Early to Rise In Blackedout Hawaii These Days

OUT IN HAWAII it's early to bed and early to rise. Dinner comes at noon and supper is over before dark. Nightly blackouts last until dawn. Sleep and quietude have supplanted gaiety and revelry for the duration. That is life on the island as described by Samuel Wilder King, Hawaii's delegate to Congress, who was guest speaker at the American Association of University Women's tea yesterday afternoon.

"In fact," said Mr. King, "the full impact of war conditions hit Hawaii December 7. Blackouts, gasoline rationing and careful distribution of foods have been in effect on the island since the attack on Pearl Harbor."

Samuel Wilder King.

Price control by this time is not unfamiliar. Since the civilian population lives and works closely with military authorities in the war effort, there in no grumbling or fault-finding at sacrifices. The people see the needs and necessities first hand, according to Mr. King.

"Morale of the country is high," he explained, "and everyone is accepting hardships with good spirits and fortitude."

In referring to the military situation of Hawaii, Mr. King pointed out that additional air power had been added and the defenses of the island greatly strengthened. Also, that civilian defense is running most efficiently.

"Hawaii is making a tremendous effort to maintain civilian economy," asserted the speaker. "Cargo space and materials are allocated so as not to put the small businessman out of business. The merchant takes a list of his needs to the military authorities, who work out some means of giving him sufficient supplies to remain in business."

As for the women, Mr. King explained that every woman is engaged in some type of war service. And the men do double duty. After finishing their day's work they serve as air-raid wardens, auxiliary policemen and in other wartime duties.

Mrs. Clyde M. Hadley, president-elect of A. A. U. W., introduced the speaker. Mrs. William C. Van Vleck, retiring president of the Washington Branch, was honored by members of the A. A. U. W. at a luncheon Sunday at the clubhouse. Mrs. A. Remington Kellogg presided over the luncheon meeting and paid tribute to Mrs. Van Vleck's services.

Petworth Club Sets Fast Pace

IF YOU'RE good at statistics, jot down these figures on paper. But better still, keep them in mind—they're decidely worth remembering. The Visiting Nurse Group of Petworth Woman's Club has completed 115,470 pieces of cotton roll, bandages, jackets and other hospital materials during the past year. This fact was brought out in Mrs. C. M. Ballard's report for the group at the club's annual meeting, held yesterday at Petworth Methodist Church. Mrs. V. H. Sehorn reported that the Red Cross unit had sewn 3190 garments and knitted 1398 garments. In addition, one member of the group, Mrs. B. K. Bauer, made 425 woolen shorts for boys. Mrs. Frank J. McMaugh, president, presided.

Following reports, a memorial service, conducted by Mrs. H. R. Norton, was held in memory of deceased club members. A reception honoring Mrs. LaVerne Beales, who is leaving Washington to live in Iowa, concluded the day's events.

Doings of the Day

Jango's see Lieut. James Stewart of the United States Army Air Corps, in the movie, "Winning With Wings," 5 p. m. at the home of Mrs. McCook Knox, 3250 N Street Northwest. Mrs. Clarence R. Goodwin, Air Youth Division of the National Aeronautics Association, presents the movie. Those sponsoring the showing are: Albert Lewis, acting director, and Lieutenant Studebaker of the Army Air Corps Information Research and Education Public Relations Division . . . Quota Club of Montgomery County holds dinner meeting 6:30 p. m. at Kenwood Country Club. Mrs. Sara Williams, who until recently was stationed in Singapore as a Seventh Day Adventist missionary, relates her experiences of the 105-day trip home. Mrs. Wilma C. Enright, president, presides.

Lieut. Jimmy Stewart

Did You Know . . .?

THAT Mrs. Clyde M. Hadley, president-elect of the Washington Branch, A. A. U. W., expects to carry on a full, gay summer program for those members who remain in town. Monday teas will be regular events with an occasional Sunday tea thrown in for extra measure. Speakers and musical entertainment will highlight the teas. The junior groups plan no let-up in entertainment for service men and college girls coming to Washington for war work. Picnics are on schedule for the hikers' group, and square dances for those who like to swing it.

THAT the Children's Museum is celebrating its first birthday Saturday with a gala party at the Villa Rosa, 4215 Massachusetts Avenue. Doors have the welcome sign out from 11 a. m. to 5 p. m. and again at 8 p. m. to 10 p. m. There are movies at 11:30 in the morning and a Junior League marionette show at 3 o'clock. At 8:30 o'clock, amateur astronomers will bring out their telescopes for a "star party." Admission is free except for a gift—a typewriter, foreign postage stamp, coin, nonfiction book or a station wagon will do.

THAT the Woman's National Democratic Club departed from its usual tradition yesterday. It called in Mrs. Newton Cordis Wing, chairman of the Salvage Committee, to get the low-down on just what the club members could do to help. Mrs. Wing obliged by urging each member to pledge herself to collect at least 100 pounds of salvage material. She emphasized the fact that the organized welfare centers were among the many distribution points for salvage; and that by taking the salvaged things to the welfare centers you serve the double purpose of supplying work for the employes and serving the country's needs. Rubber and metals, according to Mrs. Wing, are the crying need of the moment but nothing should be overlooked.

THAT Miss Meredith Howard, chairman of the War Bonds Committee of the Woman's National Democratic Club, reported an enthusiastic response to the bond salesmanship class conducted by Mrs. Raymond Ewell. That Mrs. Hamilton Lewis was the first club member to enroll in the salesmanship class. By the way, the class is holding a meeting today. One lesson of two and one-half hours entitles the pupil to qualify as a bond salesman.

Mrs. Glenn has been vice president of the Girl Scouts since 1939. She also is chairman of the national program committee and chairman of the national plan work committee which introduced in 1941, a two-year plan for Girl Scout participation in defense. The third week in June Mrs. Glenn will attend the Senior Northfield Conference and will be one of the speakers.

Taxis to Make Another Plea Against Zones

The cab drivers' union will present another petition to the Public Utilities Commission this morning on its objections to the new zone scale regulations scheduled to go into effect at 12:01 June 15.

Although the details of the petition were not for release until they had been received by the PUC, it was understood that there were only slight revisions to distinguish this from a petition sent the PUC last Thursday. The commission has not yet acted upon this previous request from the union.

A union spokesman also said yesterday that "legal steps" against the PUC were being prepared. At a mass meeting of cab drivers held Friday night, E. A. Glenn promised that an injunction against the enforcement of the new regulations would be sought.

PUC Chairman Gregory Hankin last night pooh-poohed the idea of a taxi strike.

"Why do you bother the Public Utilities Commission asking questions on something so inconsequential as a taxi strike that will never be called, when the commission is busy with something so important as the origin and destination survey?" Hankin asked.

Mrs. Anderson Testifies Son Was Drunk

Special Dispatch to The Post

Hagerstown, Md., June 1.—The mother of James Anthony Anderson, charged with the rape of a 36-year-old Social Security worker at her home in Glen Echo, Md., February 21, testified today that the boy had been a "problem child" since he was 7 years old and was "paralyzed drunk" the night of the crime.

Mrs. Ruth Naomi Devine, the last witness before the boy's trial was adjourned for the night, told a Washington County jury that her son began a career of petty crime at the age of 8 or 9 and finally was sent to the National Training School at 13. He remained in the Washington reformatory for two years, she said.

Mother Tells of His "Temper"

Mrs. Devine, a hotel employe in Washington, testified her son began to give her trouble by playing hookey from school and on being transferred to an ungraded school started robbing ice boxes. It was when he stole an automobile that he was sent to the reformatory, she said.

The alleged victim testified Anderson awoke her about 11:30 p. m. by hammering on the door and finally entered by breaking the glass. Boasting of his prowess, she said, he threatened to shoot her. She said she managed to grasp the revolver but he overpowered her and forced her into a bedroom, where he ravished her several times and then strapped up her legs and arms.

United States Park Policeman Ernest Cullender, who arrested Anderson in a restaurant at the Arlington, Va., end of Key Bridge, said the youth admitted he criminally assaulted the woman three times. Corpl. Frank Sopher, of Montgomery County, coroborated Cullender's testimony.

Charges of jail breaking still face Anderson, who was apprehended 48 hours after he escaped from the Rockville (Md.) Jail last Tuesday night with two other prisoners.

New Pay Chief

Comdr. Young Is Jumped To Admiral

ADM. WILLIAM B. YOUNG

In a brief ceremony at the Navy Department yesterday, Comdr. William Brent Young was sworn in as paymaster general of the Navy and chief of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts. He was simultaneously promoted to rear admiral.

Young a native of Washington and a graduate of Georgetown University, was jumped over the heads of many senior supply officers into the key post. Since the last war only three other commanders have been advanced to rear admiral, skipping the grade of captain—Rear Admirals Ben Morell, Perceval S. Rossiter and Ross T. McIntire.

Admiral Young succeeds Rear Admiral Ray Spear who is retiring upon reaching the statutory age limit.

Admiral Young was born here June 18, 1888. He was a member of the Georgetown relay team from 1912 to 1915, while attending the university law school. Graduating in the latter year, he practised law in Washington until called into service as a Naval Reserve supply officer in the last war.

In 1918, he was outside superintendent of the supply department at the Philadelphia Navy Yard, in charge of loading troops and materials for the A. E. F. He became a regular naval officer in 1921.

He lives at 105 Hesketh Street, Chevy Chase, Md.

Indians Lose 19-Year Fight

The Sioux Tribe of Indians lost a 19-year-old legal battle with the Great White Father's people yesterday in a Court of Claims decision dismissing their petition to recover about $739,116,256 for the allegedly unlawful appropriation of tribal land in and around the Dakotas.

The nature of the fight was characterized by a paragraph of the 73-page decision which read: "In essence, the present claim is moral, rather than legal, and before we can adjudicate and render judgment upon it, we must have from Congress clear authority to do so, which authority, we think, was not conferred . . ."

The Indians contended that the Government acquired the property, consisting of more than 73,781,826 acres, in violation of special treaties pledging eternal ownership to the Indians and their descendants. The land, it was said, was taken over by the Government under authority of a congressional act in 1877.

Under the act, the Indians ceded territories in return for Government assistance in direct relief and aid in establishing farming lands and educational facilities.

The suit was brought by members or decendants of the Sioux Tribe on the Rosebud Indian Reservation, South Dakota; Standing Rock Indian Reservation, North and South Dakota; Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, South Dakota; Sioux Tribe of the Crow Creek Indian Reservation, South Dakota; Sioux Tribe of the Lower Brule Reservation, South Dakota; Sioux Tribe of the Santee Indian Reservation, Nebraska and Sioux Tribe of Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Montana.

Defense Will Not Win The War
"Everyone with eyes to see should get a copy of his book." —THE NEW YORK TIMES
W. F. Kernan
LT. COL. U.S. ARMY
POCKETBOOK EDITION COMPLETE AND UNABRIDGED
New POCKET BOOK Edition just out

You say it—
You feel it—
Now read it
25¢

A THING happened in the U.S.A. a few weeks ago that is one of the great and thrilling things that can happen. A free nation suddenly made up its mind

Almost over night, millions of people suddenly knew they were sick of defense and wanted to attack. You heard this nation's new voice over the air and across the back fence and in the corner store. You saw the new spirit in cartoons, in newspaper editorials, in magazine pieces. You felt it yourself!

And at that moment a book came along that told you why you were right to feel what you felt.

The time was right—the book was right—and the two forces came together to make a sensation in the book business. The book began to sell thousands of copies a week. And once it hit the best-seller lists in every city

It is surging today—just as the new offensive spirit is surging and swelling in the country's determined heart.

Now you can read it—for 25c

Ordinarily it would be months, maybe years, before you could get this quickly famous book for less than its original price.

But POCKET BOOKS were started in the big belief that books should be made available to millions of people, not thousands. And "Defense Will Not Win The War" is most particularly a book that should be read by millions, not thousands—should be read now—read while 1942 is still young. So, through the far-sighted and patriotic cooperation of the original publishers, Little, Brown & Co., and the author, POCKET BOOKS can now sell "Defense Will Not Win The War" at 25c.

And when you buy it at 25c, you buy every word and comma that Lieutenant Colonel Kernan wrote.

POCKET BOOKS are not digests. They are complete reprints of the original. They are small and light, with special colorful covers that gleam clean and fresh months after you buy them. They are easy to read, too, with their large, comfortable type on good opaque paper. You can buy POCKET BOOKS in cities, villages and towns all over the U.S.—buy them wherever books or magazines are sold.

Whatever kind of reading you like best you will find in POCKET BOOKS—classics, modern best-sellers, detective stories, biography, politics. And also well edited, popular collections of prose, poetry, and fiction.

But first, we urge you to buy this stimulating and deeply important book by Lieutenant Colonel Kernan of our own U. S. Army. You and your neighbors and a million other Americans like you.

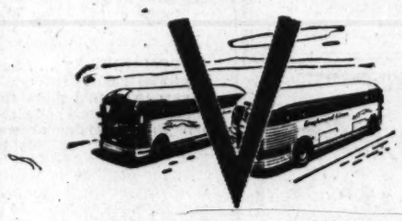
TOMORROW


Greyhound and Blue Ridge buses will operate on NEW WARTIME SCHEDULES

The transportation needs of America-at-war have made it necessary to change Greyhound schedules on many routes beginning tomorrow. This new service has been arranged in full cooperation with the wartime program of the Office of Defense Transportation.

Today the important thing is to make every bus work full time—keeping vital traffic on the move. To achieve this purpose, Greyhound is introducing many changes—diverting buses to more essential routes—reducing driving speeds—eliminating Expresses and Limiteds and many "second sections"—unifying service with other bus companies in some cases—conserving tires and vital materials in every way.

Be sure to ask about the new schedules before you take a trip. We hope you will not be inconvenienced, crowded or delayed. But if you are, please be lenient—the war effort comes first with Greyhound as it does with you.

A Good Listener

Told to stay at his listening post while on maneuvers, Valdez remained on duty for two days while officers forgot about him.

When they finally picked him up at conclusion of problem, he was still listening.

Something to Worry About

Fresno, Calif., June 1 (AP).—A newspaper reader is plagued with curiosity on one point about the raid on Japan by Brig. Gen. Jimmie Doolittle and His Gang. "I have got things pretty well pieced together now," the letter to the Fresno Bee said, "but one thing keeps me awake nights. What was the score of the ball game they (the bombers) interrupted?"

The Federal Diary

By Jerry Kluttz

Administration Faces Fight on Overtime Pay

The Administration faces a tough fight on the President's overtime pay plan for all Federal workers paid less than $3800. Hearings will start today at 10:30 before the House Civil Service Committee. Congress must be convinced that the overtime principle should be applied to all employes, rather than to certain groups, if the proposal is to be approved. Frankly, it looks bad now. The Administration is sending up William H. McReynolds, the President's administrative assistant on personnel; Civil Service Commissioner Arthur S. Flemming, and Edgar B. Young, Budget Bureau personnel director, to explain the bill and its purposes.

Congressional sentiment is definitely for a war bonus at this point. In fact, some people believe that the committee will report out a bonus bill instead of the overtime pay plan. Postal employes and the American Federation of Labor employe groups will support the bonus plan. However, any war bonus bill would be greatly restricted. Several members of Congress are proposing that a bonus be paid to employes paid less than $3200. The bill of Chairman Robert Ramspeck that would give $300 bonuses to all employes regardless of salary is definitely out.

Ben Cohen is reported to have refused an offer from the White House to be general counsel of the War Man Power Board. He continues to donate his services to the Interior Department but he's understood to be seeking appointment in the combat unit of the Army Air Corps . . . Social Security Board has been ordered out of its 1724 F Street building by this weekend. Budget Bureau will take over the structure . . . Robert Martin has been appointed to succeed Mike Meehan at the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. H. B. McCoy succeeds Martin as chief of the Division of Industrial Economy.

Practical Experience

Dr. Luther Gulick, who teamed up with Louis Brownlow and others to draft the President's plan to reorganize the Federal Government on paper, is now having a dose of practical experience on how to operate a Federal agency. He was brought in by Donald Nelson, War Production Board chief, to straighten out WPB's complex administrative organization . . . Joseph B. Eastman, the transportation czar, was brushed off the other day when he tried to buy a plane ticket to Chicago at the Washington National Airport. He had forgotten his travel priority certificate. He finally bought a ticket after he had identified himself.

A barracks is being constructed in the park behind the State Department building to house White House and State Department guards . . . Office of Facts and Figures is putting out posters to build morale . . . Checks are delayed in old-line agencies, too. Yesterday less than half of the employes at the National Institute of Health were paid. The checks have been two to four days late. There's no good excuse for it . . . Federal workers have contributed more than $40,000 to the China Relief Fund and all the money isn't in. The goal was $30,000 . . . It's now eight months since the Ramspeck-Mead automatic promotion act became effective but many War Department guards still haven't been given the salary boosts. The guards are the lowest paid of all white-collar workers.

The Army Specialist Corps is about ready to roll. The regulations provide that Federal employes, other than temporary workers, may be transferred to the corps. Employes transferred would be given leaves of absence. After the war they would be eligible to be reinstated to their former positions without the loss of retirement or any of the other benefits. The executive order that set up the corps provides that the Civil Service Commission shall do the recruiting but the regulations give the Secretary of War sole appointing power. And that means the department will do its own recruiting for all practical purposes.

Representative "Runt" Bishop, the tailoring Congressman, is now making over a riding suit into a bicycling outfit for a local deb . . . Many employes are being denied summer vacations. Officials have been ordered to stagger vacations over the entire year by Transportation Czar Eastman. Vacations also are being started in the middle of the week instead of on weekends . . . The editor of the Talladeger, Ala., Mountain Home, finds the Congressional Record very useful. He uses it to wrap his newspaper for mailing.

Senate Ends Hearings on D. C. Budget

Additional Requests Totaling $500,000 Received Since House Passed Record Bill

By Christine Sadler
Post Staff Writer

As the President asked Congress for $21,845.58 to cover District deficiencies for 1940 and 1941, the Senate Subcommittee on District of Columbia Appropriations yesterday completed hearings on the largest City of Washington budget in history.

Official requests totalling approximately $500,000 have been made to the subcommittee since the House approved an appropriation of $56,126,131 on May 5. Requests by scores of citizens groups would run the total up several more millions.

Senator O'Mahoney (Democrat) of Wyoming, chairman of the subcommittee, said he would study the bill "line by line" today and that his group would mark it up tomorrow.

Although not indicating he would recommend a cut in the appropriation of $3,055,050 for St. Elizabeths Hospital, approved by the House, Senator O'Mahoney pointed out the appropriation last year was only $2,956,500 and said he had been studying a report by Budget Officer Walter Fowler that showed the cost of caring for District patients at the hospital was more per day than the cost of caring for other patients there.

618 Insane Per 100,000

Another interesting thing about the Fowler study, he said, was that it showed the number of insane persons in the District to be 618 per 100,000 population, while the national average is only 282.9. Due to the "peculiar" District set-up, however, a high percentage of the patients committed to St. Elizabeths were suffering only from senility, he said.

Senator O'Mahoney said he was much impressed by the need for civilian defense funds presented yesterday by Harry S. Wender, executive vice president of the Federation of Citizens Associations, but said his committee could not appropriate without authorization.

A. Julian Brylawski, representing the D. C. Traffic Advisory Council, and Washington I. Cleveland, representing the District chapter of the American Automobile Association, asked for $30,000 for safety education. They declared it was needed especially for "pedestrians who are newcomers to the city." Both pointed to increased traffic problems brought on by blackout regulations.

Rufus S. Lusk, president of the Washington Taxpayers Association, who also appeared on the final afternoon, asked that the House-approved appropriation of $8,529,245 for the Board of Public Welfare be cut by $320,000. He said the board had an unexpended balance of $174,000 this year and has been appropriated by the House $157,000 more for 1943 than for the current 12 months.

More Money for Schools Asked

Mrs. Oscar Kuldell, representing the Progressive Citizens of Georgetown, asked additional expenditures for schools and completion of all the public school buildings for which money has been appropriated. Lack of available materials, however, was expected to stay most school construction for the year.

Senator O'Mahoney pointed out that the included request for funds to remodel the old tuberculosis hospital on Upshur Street might run into the same priorities problem.

The $21,845.58 requested in deficiency funds by the President would include—among other more minor items—the following sums: $6429.10 for the Health Department; $7630.41 for the Board of Public Welfare; $3097.36 for judgments against the District and $1169.26 for general advertising.

OPA Economist To Face Court Today in Attack

J. Franklin Huber, 24, a "junior business economist" in the Office of Price Administration, is to be arraigned in Police Court today on a charge of rape, following his arrest early Sunday on the complaint of a 20-year-old girl stenographer in his department.

Detective Sergt. Roy Blick said that Huber admitted the attack at the time he was arrested. Huber lives at 5128 North Capitol Street.

The alleged victim, who came to Washington only two weeks ago, told police that Huber attacked her early Saturday morning near the golf course in Rock Creek Park. They had gone there in his car, she said, after she refused to drink with him in a restaurant where they had gone to dance.

According to records of the Civil Service Commission and the Office of Price Administration, Huber came here from Davenport, Iowa. He is said to have formerly worked in the Department of Commerce. His civil service record, officials said, indicated that he was a brilliant student at the University of Iowa. He became attached to the OPA on February 9 of this year.

The meeting, sponsored by the Italian-American Labor Council and the Mazzini Society, has been designated the "Victory-for-America-Freedom-for-Italy" rally.

Thirteen Washington girls were among the 45 senior and postgraduate students of the National Cathedral School for Girls receiving diplomas at the graduating exercises held yesterday at the Washington Cathedral. Retrial Denied Laborer in Assault Case

Efforts of William I. Robinson, Negro laborer, to obtain a new trial on charges of raping the 15-year-old daughter of a Government official last August ended in failure yesterday when the Court of Appeals ruled that no error was committed by the District Court in denying a motion for retrial.

The 34-year-old defendant, scheduled to die July 14, based his motion for a new trial on grounds that the lower court refused continuance of his case at a time when, he alleged, public feeling was high about the crime. He also charged that his murder indictment was not technically in order because it was signed by an assistant United States attorney.

The appellate court declared that "a general indignation toward those who commit rape is not regarded by our society as bias or prejudice."

"There was no showing that the inflamed mind was directed toward this defendant," the court said. "We cannot assume that all juries impaneled at any given time are not going to give any defendant a fair trial."

In dismissing the defendant's allegation concerning the form of the indictment, the court said: "We hold that the contention is not meritorious because it concerns a matter of form which did not prejudice defendant."

Ewing's Business Partner Seeks Relief on Note

Orman W. Ewing, former politician convicted February 21 of raping a young OPM stenographer, became involved yesterday in another legal controversy as he awaited court action on his plea for a new trial. Ewing is in District Jail facing a possible maximum sentence of 30 years.

Miss Hester C. Chamberlin, star defense witness in his trial, filed a petition in District Court asking that $3500 in notes, which she said were part of a $10,000 fund used for Ewing's defense, be taken from Ewing's son, Lowell, and returned to her.

Miss Chamberlin, who is said to have been Ewing's partner in the ownership of the rooming house at 1101 Sixteenth Street Northwest, where the alleged rape occurred, claimed that she had agreed to have her name used in obtaining the funds for Ewing's defense. Naming both Ewing and his son as defendants in her petition, she said the promissory notes were secured by a second trust on the rooming house.

Christiansen Heads Public Play Facilities

District Recreation Board Appoints Him, Orders a 'Bang-up' July 4th Celebration

Washington's public recreation facilities were officially consolidated under a single authority last night as the new District of Columbia Board of Recreation held its organization meeting and unanimously appointed Milo F. Christiansen as director of recreation.

Also unanimously, the board elected Harry S. Wender, executive vice president of the Federation of Citizens Associations, as its chairman and Mrs. Alice Hunter, president of the Federation of Parent-Teacher Associations, as secretary.

In beginning to function and creating a new District of Columbia Department of Recreation, the board wrote finis to the divided authority under which the city's recreation program has operated, and it sounded the death knell of the old Community Center and Playgrounds Department.

Will Frame Policy

Henceforth the board will have charge of policy matters, formerly divided among the District Commissioners, the Board of Education and the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, and Christiansen will execute the policies as head of the Recreation Department.

Christiansen for 14 months has been coordinator of recreation for the District and executive director of the Community Center and Playgrounds Department. Wender took a leading part in the battle for legislation by Congress setting up the new seven-member recreation board.

"I will do everything in my power," Christiansen told the board, "to make the District Recreation Department one of the outstanding public systems in the country."

Salary Not Yet Set

Earlier, as the board considered appointment of a director, Christiansen said he was applying on the condition that "the salary is commensurate with the responsibilities" and suggested $7500 a year as a starter. He now makes $5600. The board agreed that the District Classification Board, the District Commissioners and the Civil Service Commission must set the salary.

The board authorized Christiansen to continue operation of recreational facilities in accordance with rules and regulations now in effect, and committees to draw up by-laws and determine board functions and responsibilities were named.

The pen with which President Roosevelt signed the act creating the board was received from T. S. Settle, secretary of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

Tackling a number of recreational matters after organizing, the board authorized Christiansen to complete arrangements for weekly community sings and Marine Band concerts at the Sylvan Theater, June 18 through August 13. He was directed also to proceed immediately with arrangements for "the grandest, biggest, bang-up" Fourth of July celebration Washington has ever known.

A special committee was named to study the extent the Recreation Department should cooperate in supporting the Women's Battalion, members of which serve as hostesses for service men at dances and other entertainments here.

Capt. Wilburn, Bolling Flier, Killed in Crash

Capt. Donald Ernest Wilburn, 25, of the First Mapping Group, at Bolling Field, was killed when his single-place plane crashed and burned in the woods near Waldorf, Md., yesterday afternoon, Air Corps officials announced last night. He was on a routine flight from Bolling Field to Charlotte, N. C.

WILBURN

Army officials pointed out that the weather was overcast and cloudy, and officers at the field were awaiting a report last night as to what caused the accident.

Captain Wilburn was married and made his home at 1412 Chapin Street Northwest. He was graduated from the Advanced Flying School, Kelly Field, Tex., in 1939. He was born here, June 11, 1916.

Jam Results as Navy Dept. Opens New Admittance Plan

A new system of admitting visitors to the Navy Department went into effect yesterday and while many grumbled at long waits in line, officials declared the admittance machinery will be working smoothly within a day or so.

The new system is designed to provide more security against the admission of unauthorized persons into naval offices and speed up the procedure for admittance of officials from other Government departments or of Allied missions for conferences within the Navy Building.

Under the new plan, members of Congress and the Diplomatic Corps, officers and men of the armed services and employes of other Government departments continue to use the center entrance at the foot of Eighteenth Street. Bidders use a separate compound in the new buildings south of the reflecting pool.

All commercial visitors must call at a reception desk at the Seventeenth Street entrance. Under the new system, also, "commercial" visitors must make prior appointments. Few had done so yesterday.

Library Reopens Manuscript Unit

Closed to the public during recent months while its collections were being moved to new quarters, the Manuscripts Division of the Library of Congress resumed its regular reading-room services yesterday. The division now is located on the third floor of the Annex Building.

In announcing the reopening, Archibald MacLeish, the librarian, pointed out that many of the library's important collections have been removed from Washington as a precaution against the possibility of damage from air raids. Because this material will not be available for either consultation or photoduplication, the librarian advised students to correspond with the manuscripts division before coming to Washington to use its collections.

Four Bus Lines Pool Operations

Operations of four bus lines running between New York and Washington will be pooled beginning tomorrow under an experimental plan approved by the Office of Defense Transportation.

By eliminating duplicating services, staggering schedules and accepting tickets of any of the lines, operations between the points will be curtailed about 25 per cent.

The lines are the Pennsylvania Greyhound Lines, Inc., Quaker City Bus Co., Safeway Trails, Inc., and Eastern Trails, Inc.

Citizens Urge Recreation Center Repairs

The Kenilworth Citizens Association last night voted to join with other community groups in urging the District Recreation Board to approve immediate completion of repairs on the Kenilworth Recreation Center at Kenilworth Avenue and Ord Street Northeast.

The group will send a delegate to the recreation board, along with delegates from the area's defense council, the Community Center Council, Parent-Teacher Association, the Police Boys Club Unit 11 and the Ladies Guild, to ask for the repairs. All the groups, it was said, would have occasion to use the recreation center, which is not suitable as a meeting place now because of its dilapidated condition.

The association adopted a resolution commending the auxiliary policemen in the area for their work in protecting school children. Copies of the resolution will be forwarded to Maj. Edward J. Kelly, superintendent of police, and Capt. Hugh Groves, of No. 11 Precinct.

The meeting, which was the last until the second Monday in September, was held in the Kenilworth School, Thirty-fourth and Ord Streets Northeast. President Charles M. Maize presided.

Metropolis View

Vincent P. Boudren was elected president of the Metropolis View Citizens Association at the meeting last night held at the Metropolitan Apartments, 200 Rhode Island Avenue Northeast.

Other officers named were Mrs. Franklin G. Sartwell, vice president; Pierce B. Butler, sr., secretary; Mrs. W. M. Flinchum, assistant secretary, and Saviour Sidotti, treasurer.

Your Daily Health Quiz

How Many Tons of Blood Does the Heart Pump Daily?

Although the average person has only 6 to 7 pints of blood normally, it circulates through the body so fast that the heart probably pumps 9 to 10 tons of blood daily.

Many people never realize that the blood stream must travel at this terrific speed in order to keep you alive. As you know, blood is made up of millions of tiny red blood cells. Each of these cells picks up a load of life-giving oxygen from the lungs—then rushes off to all parts of the body and releases its cargo to hungry living tissues. When the oxygen is burned up, the cells then carry off waste substance, called carbon dioxide, back through the lungs where it is eliminated.

When blood is rich and pure, it contains chemical substances and cells capable of repairing damaged body tissues and replenishing our strength and energy. That is why some folks get over sickness and disease twice as fast as others . . . rarely feel tired . . . never complain . . . even cuts and bruises vanish like magic.

Now here's a tip. If your blood is thin, pale and watery . . . unable to supply normal strength and vibrant energy . . . do something about it today. Get a bottle of Boncquet (pronounced Bon-Kay) Tablets. Devised by an eminent biochemist, Boncquet Tablets contain the active principle of raw liver (the red blood cell maturing factor), organic vegetable iron and other minerals, vitamin B complex, fortified with pure crystalline vitamins B and G, and assimilable calcium and phosphorus. Your blood needs these essential raw materials that are generally deficient in the modern everyday diet.

Try Boncquet Tablets for 9 days. If you want to add new fighting blood. If you don't feel better, look better, have more strength and youthful energy, your money will be immediately refunded.

Dealers Get Gas Supply; 'Famine' Ends

High-Test Fuel Still Unavailable; Weekend Traffic Reduced 40 Per Cent

Cash tills in local filling stations were ringing again yesterday, as dealers, receiving fresh gas allotments for the new ten-day period, resumed business after the "gasless" holiday weekend.

While there was a plentiful supply of straight gasoline, dealers reported they were still experiencing difficulty in obtaining full stocks of high test fuels, as on other occasions, due to a scarcity of tetraethyl lead. This ingredient, they explained, was added to high powered fuels to give more combustible power.

Dealers Establish Quotas

George E. Keneipp, manager of the Keystone Automobile Club, stated that his survey yesterday morning indicated that more and more dealers are putting the "quota" system into effect. Under this plan, dealers are selling just so many gallons a day, and closing down when the allotted figure has been reached.

Commenting on the dearth of Sunday traffic, due to the fuel shortage, Mr. Keneipp said his surveys showed that motoring Sunday was only "about 40 per cent of the usual traffic."

With the announcement of the Office of Price Administration that 216 new passenger cars and the 27 now in reserve to meet emergency situations would be allotted to the District of Columbia under the rationing program in June, dealers were complaining that they were spending some $300,000 a month to keep the 6000 new autos they have on hand in running condition. They are anxious to have the Government take them off their hands.

Rubberneckers Off Streets

Yesterday also marked the passing of a long familiar sight on Washington streets—the sightseeing bus. As a conservation measure to save rubber, the OPA ruled "rubberneck" buses were nonessential to the war effort, and sightseeing companies are wondering how they are going to dispose of 30 luxurious buses they have on hand.

With the opening of six new locations yesterday where applications for tires and gas cards will be received, the press of business at local rationing headquarters was eased. Applicants can now apply to the following branches: Tempo Building, Fourteenth Street and Pennsylvania Avenue Northwest; Force School, 1740 Massachusetts Avenue Northwest; Old Building, 458 Indiana Avenue Northwest; Jackson School, R between Thirtieth and Thirty-first Streets Northwest; Oyster School, Twenty-ninth and Calvert Streets Northwest; Library, Sixteenth and Lamont Streets Northwest; Library, Georgia Avenue and Upshur Street Northwest; Brightwood School, Georgia Avenue and Quackenbos Street Northwest; Brookland School, Tenth and Monroe Streets Northeast; Library, Seventh and D Streets Southeast; Hayes School, Fifth and K Streets Northeast; Langdon School, Twentieth and Evarts Streets Northeast; Library, Seventh and Eye Streets Southwest; Ketcham School, Fifteenth Street and Good Hope Road Southeast, and another to be located in Benning, address to be announced.

Senate Group To Hear Foes Of Pay Raise

The full Senate District Committee will meet at 10:30 o'clock this morning to complete hearings on the bill proposing a pay raise of $300 a year for members of Washington's fire and police departments.

Corporation Counsel Richmond Keech and Maj. Edward J. Kelly, Chief of Metropolitan Police, will be heard. Keech is expected to explain the Commissioners' opposition to the measure.

Preceding this meeting a subcommittee headed by Senator Burton (Republican) of Ohio will conduct a hearing on the bill proposing abolition of the District Coroner's office.

Senator McCarran (Democrat) of Nevada, chairman of the District Committee, yesterday introduced a bill that would abolish the Independent Board of Public Welfare for the District of Columbia, setting up in its place a Department of Public Welfare responsible to the Commissioners.

As the present board is set up its personnel is not responsible to the Commissioners, but performs many duties for which the Commissioners are responsible.

Six District bills were reported to the Senate yesterday and placed on the calendar for consideration during this term of Congress. Among them were proposals to substitute lethal gas for the electric chair, to provide for pay of custodial employes who must work extra hours at school buildings to take care of war needs, and to provide a $25 annual license fee for all funeral cars.

Camp to Run June 15, Aug 15

Plans for a summer day camp for children at the Parkside Elementary School, Silver Spring, Md., were announced yesterday by Mrs. W. H. McPherson, project chairman.

The camp will open June 15 and continue through August 15. Two daily session will be held from 8 a. m. to 1:30 p. m. and 1:30 to 6:30 p. m. The cost will be $30 for two months to parents of children attending both sessions and $15 to those parents whose children attend only one of the daily sessions.

'Winning Your Wings' Is Hailed as a Model 'Short'

James Stewart Superb in Current Victory Film; April Box Office Champions Stress Enjoyment; Items of News and Gossip of the Theater

IF THERE WAS ANY WEEKEND REVIEW of the new film bills that failed to pay superlative tribute to "Winning Your Wings," a component part of virtually every screen program in the midcity area, we have yet to see it.

JAMES STEWART

So quickly and so surely has this exceptional "short" engaged national attention that the veteran Terry Ramsaye, editor of the Motion Picture Herald, foremost of the industry's trade journals, editorializes upon it in his issue of May 30, in these words:

" 'Winning Your Wings,' a 10-minute Victory Film, starring Mr. James Stewart, produced by Warner Brothers and released by the War Activities Committee through Warner exchanges, is a hit, and a success of an order not common among 'shorts.'

"This little picture with the big appeal is now playing its first runs in metropolitan areas and is getting more word-of-mouth approval than the features on the same bills.

"In contrast with some of the mediocre product that has come to the screen in the name of war effort, this picture, with its keen professional quality and demonstration of the special skills of Hollywood, may be cited to the array of semiprofessionals and amateurs variously engaged in war picture making under various Government auspices."

All very true, from the standpoint of the trade. But I dare say the most vivid memory carried away from "Winning Your Wings" by the mass public will be of the extraordinary effectiveness of James Stewart's commentary. It matches the most forceful reading he ever brought to the sound tracks in any of his films made for commercial entertainment.

And I wonder how come that the sapient Mr. Ramsaye hasn't heard that Jimmy is now Lieut. James Stewart, instead of "Mister"?

While obviously not to be classified as theatrical amusement—and for that reason perhaps alien to this column—a valuable contribution to public entertainment, nonetheless, is being planned by the National Gallery of Art. Beginning next Sunday, June 7, the National Galley, Constitution Avenue and Sixth Street, will inaugurate a series of special Sunday evening openings from 2 to 10 p. m. This is being done for the benefit of the men in the armed forces on leave, war workers and others in wartime Washington who, because of their daytime activities, heretofore have not been able to visit the Gallery. From 7:30 p. m., until closing, a concert will be given in the East Garden Court by an ensemble of musicians from the National Symphony Orchestra, made possible by the generosity of Mr. Chester Dale. These concerts will be open to all without charge, as are all Gallery activities.

Anyhow, the Public Liked Them

Based, as usual, on a bona fide audit of national boxoffice receipts, the month of April produced six champion money-makers from among the feature pictures released for nation-wide distribution in that month. Not necessarily in the order of their earnings at the ticket wickets, they were, "To the Shores of Tripoli," "The Lady Has Plans," "The Invaders," "The Fleet's In," "The Courtship of Andy Hardy" and "Kings Row." That adds up to two for Paramount and one each for Twentieth Century-Fox, Columbia, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and the Warner Brothers. A purely personal appraisal would be that a couple on the list did not quite justify the prosperity they evidently enjoyed. Purely personal, I said.

At any rate, the popular choices of the pictures for which the public was most anxious to spend its "movie money" seem to corroborate the consensus of opinion recently adduced by Mr. James Shelley Hamilton, of the National Board of Review, from interviews with Preston Sturges, Ernst Lubitsch and Archie Mayo, three of Hollywood's foremost producer-directors: That the theater primarily is an institution of entertainment. While four of the six Box-office Champions definitely presented overtones of armed conflict, all, with the single exception of "Kings Row," were preponderantly dedicated to those qualities which result in lively audience enjoyment. "Kings Row" was anything but gay, but it was grimly and starkly forceful.

Evidently confusing Steinbeck's "Tortilla Flat" with Omar's Rubaiyat, Mr. Danieloew Terrell has gone in for sustaining programs! Suiting the provender and the wassail to the words, he greets the drama desks with: "Hi, Paisano! A loaf of bread, a jug of wine and Hedy Lamarr! Tuesday at 11:30, Fox Exchange." A screening, no doubt. Having provided the bread and the heady wine, we defy him to make it a "Paradise enow" by producing the heady Hedy.

Stars in Season's Final Play

as she appears in the title role in George Bernard Shaw's "Candida," which last night opened a one-week engagement as the final attraction of the Capital's season of legitimate drama at the National Theater. Presented by the American Theater Wing, the entire proceeds of this engagement will be donated to the Army Emergency Relief Fund and the Navy Relief Society

'Candida,' at National, Places Capstone on Season's Acting

By Nelson B. Bell

"CANDIDA." The American Theater Wing War Service, Inc., presents for the benefit of Army-Navy Relief the comedy in three acts by George Bernard Shaw. Staged by Guthrie McClintic; settings by Woodman Thompson. At the National Theater.

—THE CAST—

Miss Prosperpine Garnett ..... Brenda Forbes
James Mavor Morell ..... Raymond Massey
Alexander Mill ..... Stanley Bell
Mr. Burgess ..... Ernest Cossart
Candida ..... Katharine Cornell
Eugene Marchbanks ..... Burgess Meredith

It will long remain a cherished and thrilling memory in the minds of as many playgoers as the capacity of the National Theater can accommodate in a single week that Washington's prolonged and mottled theatrical season of 1941-42 ended on a note of sublime drama.

For in the National last night was revealed to a large and discriminating audience a revival of an old, familiar and supposedly "dated" play that was illumined, rejuvenated and made to strike fire by a concert of inspired talents such as is encountered in the theater only once in a generation. Perhaps only once in a lifetime. Or many lifetimes.

Among the earliest of the Shaw plays, and one of his best, "Candida" has been played by many stars and many casts. Never within the recollection of contemporary theatergoers has it been so brilliantly interpreted as in this Katharine Cornell revival, in which she is so magnificently surrounded by Raymond Massey, Burgess Meredith, Ernest Cossart, Brenda Forbes and Stanley Bell.

Marked by Creative Artistry

In the hands of so admirably balanced a stellar cast it becomes ageless, warmly and movingly human and a work of unimpeachable itellectual and emotional integrity. Not only are its more subtle implications abundantly clarified, but there come to vigorous life those qualities of incisive and pungent wit that make it as delightful a comedy as it is radiant love story, penetrating psychological drama or engrossing study in conflicting philosophies and human relationships.

Since "Candida" has so often fallen short of this complete expression of the full measure of its inherent worth, its resurgence among the great plays of the current season—not too prolific in dramatic works of the first order—must be attributed to the intelligence, resourcefulness and superior abilities of its present players. They seem to have approached their task with a firm and triumphant determination to shake off the shackles of stereotyped convention and create something new, fresh, invigorating and exciting under a title which alone remains unchanged.

Thus, in the study of a middle-class, English rectory, through the events of the morning, afternoon and evening of a single day, the Rev. James Mavor Morell ceases to be merely a bigoted and priggish preacher and becomes a forceful and sympathetic figure of a man confronted by bewildering and perplexing problems in his normally tranquil home. Eugene Marchbanks, love-hungry, lonely and spiritually lost young poet, no longer seems the petulant, adolescent weakling, but emerges a valiant young idealist, aflame with a deep and honest ardor. Candida, more than ever before, is the symbol of a great heart, a glorious loyalty and an infinite compassion.

The young cleric, Alexander Mill; Miss Prosperpine Garnett, the excitable and acidulous secretary, and Mr. Burgess, the crafty commercialist, who invades the Morell home by right of parental privilege, are in the same mold of a warm, genial and unaccustomed believability.

Dedicated to Glorious Cause

Miss Cornell's Candida, always a figure of superlative loveliness and charm, last evening was further endowed with complete naturalness, the full beauty of a rich and irresistible voice and a simple and enveloping dignity that dominated a performance in which no false note ever was sounded. To her is intrusted all of the exquisite beauty, the tenderness and the gentle pathos of the final scene of the play, which last night, became an exalted moment of tremendously poignant drama.

The Rev. Morell limned by Raymond Massey measures the full stature of an actor of keen insight, superb natural ability and the easy eloquence bred of long and wide experience. Their is a virility, an honest enthusiasm and a splendid variety in his reading of the role that lifts it to a new level of sympathy and impressiveness.

Appearing in probably the last role in which he will be seen for many months, Burgess Meredith achieves no less than an authentic personal triumph as Marchbanks, by transforming that unhappy character from a mildly obnoxious young interloper into an altogether admirable youth of deep convictions, poetic intensity and the strength that comes from sympathetic understanding and the spiritual peace of a belated vindication. Mr. Meredith's farewell to the theater is one to be remembered as a full realization of the capabilities of a sometimes thwarted star of the first rank.

Of the others in the cast, already mentioned, no higher tribute can be paid than to say that they maintain "Candida" at the highest level of the season's acting. Guthrie McClintic's direction and Woodman Thompson's settings contribute to the same end of unified excellence.

It is a fine thing that so completely satisfying an evening in the theater should be projected by the American Theater Wing War Service, Inc., for the exclusive benefit of the Army Emergency Fund and the Navy Relief Society. The worthiest of the season's plays is dedicated to one of its worthiest causes.

Loose-Leaf Notebook

New York, June 1.

Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt went to Sardi's for lunch. He checked his hat, was shown to a table and ordered his food . . . When he had finished his lunch Vanderbilt paid his bill and left . . . "Oh, just a minute," Vincent Sardi called after him. "You forgot to get your hat from the check room" . . . "Just keep it checked there," replied the departing Vanderbilt, who earlier in the week had enlisted in the Navy. "I'll call for it after the war is over."

HELEN HAYES

Charles MacArthur phoned Gilbert Miller, the producer, who was in Chicago. Miller was associated in the production of "Candle in the Wind," the Maxwell Anderson play in which Helen Hayes toured . . . "Business has fallen off in Chicago," Miller lamented . . . "To how much?" asked MacArthur . . . "To about 17 or 18 thousand a week," sighed Miller. "That isn't a lot of money" . . . "Well," said MacArthur, "it ain't Hayes."

Nat Floyd, the N. Y. Times correspondent, is a determined reporter. He filed a story from Manila, but the censors there refused to pass it. Floyd accompanied General MacArthur to Bataan and tried to send the same dispatch from there. Again the censors held it up . . . He went to Corregidor and tried to send that story—then to Melbourne—but in each place the censors disapproved. The persevering correspondent, who had an opportunity to remain in Australia, now was more eager than ever to have that story published. He returned to America, wrote the 5000-word story and now it's awaiting the decision of Byron Price.

Jack Doyle, the veteran betting commissioner and arbiter in gambling disputes, expressed little interest in the recent suggestion that the Government start distributing a new 12½-cent coin . . . "Doesn't this new kind of money interest you?" Doyle was asked . . . "What difference does it make," shrugged the veteran gambler, "so long as it has a heads and tails?"

Edgar Ansel Mowrer, the foreign correspondent now working for the Government in Washington, is compiling a list of words and phrases most frequently used in the Capital. He calls it: "Bureaucratese" . . . The list includes "Layer the operation . . . Cut across departmental lines . . . Over-all Policy . . . Give me a fill-in on that . . . Directive . . . Let's lunch on this . . . It's in your lap . . . Meet you at the Carlton . . . Bang-up show at our shop . . . Who's going to carry the ball for the Old Man?"

Leon Henderson came to New York to deliver an address last week. He met a lady who noticed that the price administrator is getting paunchier . . . "Tell me, Leon," asked the lady, "what are you and I going to do about girdles this year?"

Gypsy Rose Lee went to the Stage Door Canteen, where she received a true ovation from the uniformed men there. They insisted that she entertain . . . "But I'm not prepared," Gypsy protested . . . "By this time your specialty doesn't need preparation," a chorus of soldiers shouted . . . "You're right," Miss Lee agreed—and proceeded to deliver a long lecture about her book, "The G-String Murder."

Vladimir Pozner, author of the recent novel, "The Edge of the Sword," was a private in the French army before its collapse. Pozner was reminiscing of the French fortune-tellers, who tried to develop a complicated system of reading fortunes from wounds. A wound at the side of the head was supposed to foretell a pleasant surprise, and a wound in the right eye indicated that a stranger soon would make a visit . . . "Were any of these ever confirmed?" Pozner was asked . . . "Only one of them," he assured. "A wound in the right foot forecast medical treatment."

Joan Lucky With English Girl Roles

Call it chance, coincidence or fate, but whatever it is, Joan Fontaine has appeared in four major pictures, all of which had English locales, and in each Miss Fontaine portrayed an English girl.

The pictures were "Gunga Din," "Damsel in Distress," "Rebecca" and "Suspicion," each one bringing her a step nearer to the Academy Award which she recently received.

So fortunate has Miss Fontaine been with matters British (ncluding her husband, Brian Aherne) that the first role she accepted after receiving the coveted award is that of—you guessed it—an English girl, in "The Constant Nymph," co-starring Charles Boyer, and being filmed at Warner Bros.

Credit—Where Credit Is Due

Hollywood, June 1.—After listening to Jimmy Stewart's inspiring performances on the Bill of Rights show, and now as commentator for "Winning Your Wings," I think our actors deserve a few boquets. In any emergency, the actors always have been, always will be the first to go over the top with their encouragement, performances, and ever ready, open pocketbooks and inspiring work. If entertaining is to be done, actors are the first to offer their services. If there are bonds to be sold, the same is true. During the last World War, the largest crowd I ever saw on Fifth Avenue (with one exception) was when Mary Pickford, Doug Fairbanks, and Charlie Chaplin came on to sell Liberty Bonds. The exception was when Col. William Hayward marched up the Avenue after the war with his colored regiment. That was really a crowd.

Everybody's taken a crack at our profession. Some of the knocks were deserved, too, because we've taken in people who had no right to be called actors or actresses. We don't like them either. But the real ones will always be a credit to their community. In the last war, when the greatest stars of Broadway made a tour of the country for the Red Cross, they not only gave free performances, but paid their living expenses and traveling expenses.

One of the amusing incidents of that tour was Laurette Taylor trying to get to know Minnie Maddern Fiske. And once in Pittsburgh, I believe it was, Mrs. Fiske moved her makeup kit to the roof so as not to be disturbed. Not that she didn't want to meet Miss Taylor. She had a job to do and wanted no interference from anyone.

Speaking of fine performances, I'd like to cite one given by Mrs. Fiske just about a year before she died. She was playing a gay, eccentric character who was all fluff, in "Mrs. Bumpstead-Leigh." I went with Ina Claire and Laura Hope Crews, who aren't bad either. And we went back between the acts to meet Mrs. Fiske. Until then, we hadn't realized how ill she was; but we saw painted on her suffering face a masque of comedy—and the real pain underneath never once came over the footlights.

Then there was Chaliapin's opening night at the Metropolitan and his death scene as "Boris Goudonov;" Madame Jeritza's performance at the same place, when she slipped, fell down a flight of stairs, and sang a whole aria on her tummy because she couldn't rise. (From then on, she never sang the part any other way.) Geraldine Farrar's "Madame Butterfly" . . . One of the last performances given by the four Cohans—George M., his mother, father and sister Josephine . . . David Warfield in "The Music Master;" Ethel Barrymore in "Captain Jinks" (that was the performance that inspired me to run away from home and seek a career on the stage—and I've never regretted it).

The mourned Jack Barrymore in "Peter Ibbetson;" Jack in "Redemption"—"Richard III"—and "Hamlet;" Lionel Barrymore in "The Copperhead;" Frances Starr in "The Easiest Way;" the excitement Doug Fairbanks packed into "The Thief of Bagdad."

Janet Beecher and Katharine Cornell in "A Bill of Divorcement." Also Katharine Hepburn and the late Jack Barrymore's performances in the same play on the screen; Henry Miller and Ruth Chatterton in "The Rainbow;" Alice Brady in "The Bride of the Lamb;" also in the picture "In Old Chicago;" Marie Dressler with Charlie Chaplin in "Tillie's Punctured Romance;" Bill Farnum in "The Spoilers;" Sothern and Marlowe in "Romeo and Juliet;" Katharine Cornell in "The Barretts of Wimpole Street." Helen Hayes in "Queen Victoria," also "The Sin of Madelon Claudet," a picture she thought so bad she was willing to buy it back from the producer; it got her an Academy award.

John Gielgud in "The Sea Gull;" Hattie McDaniel in "Gone With the Wind;" Todd Duncan in "Porgy and Bess;" Paul Whiteman's first performance of "Rhapsody in Blue," at Carnegie Hall; Orson Welles' "Citizen Kane."

Yes, let's give our actors a cheer. If you'll remember the things they've done through the years, you'll realize they deserve it.

Jockey Is Seriously Injured at Belmont

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Probably for the first time in his reckless sort of life, Buck Newsom is a little bit scared this week. There are signs that the big dough may be running out for him, an appalling kind of thought for Bon Vicant Newsom who, is used to spending with a lavish hand.

POVICH

There is strong evidence that Newsom is at the end of his tether as a highpaid big league pitcher, and that may be giving him the best of it. He may not even have a big league job in another year. Newsom has had a knack of keeping himself in circulation, but he has worn out welcomes successively in Washington, Boston and Detroit, and the field is diminishing for him.

The other day after he was slugged for six runs in the first inning by the Red Sox, it was a considerably chastened Newsom, sans bluster, who took a different tack. He sought out Manager Bucky Harris and humbled himself to the extent of asking if he were out of Harris' good graces. Newsom no longer is airily dismissing his setbacks. His ego has taken a terrific jolt. The horrible thought that he can't continue to draw big money for his kind of pitching is probably assailing him.

Newsom has lost his last five starts but it seems to be no deliberate attempt to pitch himself off the Washington Club. There isn't any other haven for him. Newsom has been thinking covetously of the Brooklyn Dodgers who made a pitch for him last spring when he was arguing salary with Detroit, but off his record with Washington the Brooklyn club can hardly show renewed interest.

Great Pitching Arm Is Losing Lustre

The record books say Newsom is 33. He says he is 32, but they could be wrong. Newsom has been around a long time and no pitching arm in baseball has taken the punishment Buck has dealt out to his own. That arm, never sore, will rank as one of the great throwing arms of baseball no matter what his won-and-lost record reads, but even Buck should have his suspicions by this time that it has lost something.

It isn't easy for him any longer to keep fogging the ball past the batter like he could when he was leading the league in strikeouts. When he tries, he's huffing and puffing out there. He has been shrewd enough to got to sidearming and curve-balling but there is no longer anything awesome about his pitching. And he's out of position to field balls hit back through the box. Smashes that have been sailing past Newsom's stern while he is in his twisted follow-through are knocked down by better fielding pitchers.

Newsom owes what success he did achieve to that pitching arm of his and the savvy that he took to the mound. There was never anything wrong with his thinking on the mound. It was the curious machinations of Newsom's mind between pitching assignments that prevented him from being one of the truly great pitchers of the majors. Leg work was anethema to him, despite the proven maxim that a pitcher must run to keep in condition. Between pitching jobs, he liked to loll.

Del Baker, his manager at Detroit, wanted no more of Newsom because he wouldn't run himself into condition. He'd think of a dozen excuses why he couldn't do leg work—his ankle hurt him, his old broken leg was acting up, etc. Newsom could always point to any one of a dozen old wounds, pick one out and sly to a manager or trainer, "that's the one that hurts. Funny it just started acting up yesterday."

Next Victory Will Restore Buck's Ego

There was never any complaint of Newsom's physical courage. Washington fans saw him pitch with a broken knee-cap and a lump on his skull that would have put other players in the hospital immediately. Newsom always took punishment pretty well . . . and he could hand it out—to himself. He called upon that pitching arm of his for jobs that no other arm, with the same abuse, could do.

In his younger days he could get away with it pretty well. But in 11 starts for the Nats this year he has pitched only two good games. It is significant that his last good game was that one-hit shutout of the Tigers. That was five starts ago, and as is the Newsom habit he rested on his laurels. His career is punctuated with one good pitching job, then two or three horrible ones by a Newsom who was taking time out to celebrate.

If we know our Newsom, he will remain chastened no longer than his next well-pitched victory when the old strut and swagger will reappear and the locker room boys will be called to lace his shoes, sure of a half-buck tip. But Buck has reason now to worry where his next victory is coming from. The fresh thought that he may not be earning a tithe of his $15,000 salary may even be dawning upon him. For two years now he has been the most over-paid pitcher in the league and he can be very well panicked by the horrible thought that next year he may be paid what he's worth.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, June 1.—This is too good to hoard. It's a letter from one of the finest baseball correspondents I've ever read, published or unpublished. Her name is Isabelle M. Parks. She lives in Washington, D. C. I've never met her, but have had the honor of taking some of her slugging epistles on the jaw. I know little about Miss Parks except that she goes to see Washington play, roots for the Yankees and hates Brooklyn, which sounds like the full life.

CONSIDINE

"Teams which lose world series to the Yankees, as most of them do," she writes, "seem to acquire a strange kind of glamour, and fans of such teams assume for themselves curious rights which they apparently cling to as tenaciously as all of us do in connection with those which we consider inalienable.

"After an admirer of one of those losing teams has recovered from the coma induced by the hard facts of a Yankee world series, he drifts into a beautiful dream world. In these dreams he erases from memory all errors of omission or commission made by his valiant athletes. . . . He recalls and cancels practically every Yankee run. This is a game which can be played only by a losing fan. Let a Yankee fan allow as how his team might have scored even more runs than they did, or that the other side was damned lucky to acquire some of their scores, and he places himself beyond the pale.

"All this brings me by degrees to your column on Fitzsimmons, a beautiful thing compounded of one-third moonbeams and the other two-thirds marijuana. One mistake you made was to drag in what were supposed to be a few cold facts. If you must know, when Fitzsimmons retired at the end of 6½ innings the score was 0 to 0, not 1 to 1.

"Taking another whiff, you recount the fact that Russo hit a ball which struck Fitz on the leg, and add, 'cut down by the drive, the old guy nevertheless managed to scramble after the ball and threw out Russo.' My dear man! The ball hit Fitz on the kneecap and bounded 20 feet into the air. When it came down it was caught by Reese at shortstop. The next time you tell that story, I imagine you will have Fitz running out to center field to retrieve the ball and then, damaged knee and all, beating Russo in a race for first. Honestly, you know you're better than that.

"Before the series, I was sure the Yankees would win, and I made up my mind I wasn't going to be annoyed when Brooklyn claimed they should have won—because I was sure that the moans of previous Yankee victims would be as nothing compared with the squeals that would emanate from Brooklyn. . . . I bought what few Brooklyn papers I could find and laughed and laughed. I admit I boiled when a Washington paper had the nerve to come out with an editorial, mind you, after the fourth game, in which it observed that even a Yankee fan must admit the Yankees didn't deserve to win that game. I didn't give a damn what the paper thought, but to tell me what I had to admit! That was too much.

"Never in my life did I consider a game won more valiantly than the game the Yankees won after Owen's muff. The first time the Yankees were here this year I asked Henrich which he enjoyed more, his home run against Brooklyn or his strikeout. He picked the home run unhesitatingly. I laughed and said he had to admit the strikeout had its points, viewed from the entertainment angle. He said, very seriously, 'What still annoys me about that is that so few people gave our boys the credit for winning that game. It takes nerve to go up and hit the way they did with the pressure on.'

"To revert to Fitz's game . . . Maybe Fitz wouldn't have allowed any runs and maybe he would have allowed enought to lose. Most sportswriters seemed to agree Fitz couldn't have fielded the ball that hit him. If it had gone through it would have been a hit and Gordon, who was on second at the time, probably would have scored. I'm going to take a puff on your marijuana and say maybe poor old Fitz was lucky he got knocked out with a blow on the knee. I've seen pitchers go seven scoreless innings against the Yankees and then lose with a flourish. The only chance you had to slobber over Fitz for a full column was the circumstance of his departure.

"Incidentally, one of the pipedreams disseminated by Brooklyn fans is how lucky the Yankees were that Keller's hit in the last inning of the fourth game bounced up in the air when it hit the scoreboard, instead of bounding back toward the field. Fact is that if it had glanced off it might have gone straight to the outfielder but it might just as easily have eluded him and gone for a triple instead of a double.

"Regarding the trouble you had recently, when you were blasted for writing 'if he could only field,'" at the end of a column about Gordon's new-found batting prowess, I think the indignant postcard you received from Brooklyn indicated more intelligence than might be expected, considering the source. I imagine the reaction of the average Brooklyn fan, after having your column read to him, was to say, 'There, even Considine admits he can't field. I always did say that guy Gordon was over-rated.'"

Tommy Roby Unconscious In Hospital

Steeplechase Rider Suffers Concussion Of Brain, Internal Injuries, Fracture

By the Associated Press

Belmont Park, N. Y., June 1.—Veteran Steeplechase Jockey Tommy Roby suffered the most serious injury incurred in a New York jumping event this spring when he fell with his mount, Knight's Quest, during the third race here this afternoon. Roby received hasty examination at the track and was reported to have concussion of the brain, possible internal injuries, a fracture of the left wrist and still was unconscious when whisked away to Mary Immaculate Hospital in nearby Jamaica.

The ironic part of the accident was that this was Roby's birthday. He had told friends this morning that he hoped to celebrate with a victory on Knight's Quest, owned by his employer, Bayard Sharp.

In front approaching the eighth obstacle, Knight's Quest came a cropper at that hedge and appeared to some observers to have rolled over on Roby.

Only four horses competed. Mrs. F. Ambrose Clark's Alcadale, an $11.60 for $2 shot, raced forwardly all the way and drew out the second turn of the field. He was hard pressed in the late stages, however, to win by three-quarters of a length over Mrs. E. DuPont Weir's Bold Stroke. Sir Bluesteel, favorite representing F. Ambrose Clark, husband of the winning owner, was a distant third. His chances were ruined because he had to be taken up sharply, following in the path of the fallen Knight's Quest. Otherwise he might have won.

Belmont Improves Air-Raid Defense

By the Associated Press

Belmont Park, N. Y., June 1.—Col. Edward C. O. Thomas, director of civilian defense for Nassau County, said today that there had been marked improvement in air-raid protection methods at Belmont Park and that as a result no steps would be taken toward closing the park.

He cited the improvement in a letter to Marshall Cassidy, in charge of air-raid precautions at the track and an official of the jockey club, but added that there was still room for further improvement.

Colonel Thomas warned last week that the race track should be closed unless greater precautions against air raids were taken. Daily inspections since last Thursday revealed, he said, that water barrels have been filled, physicians made available and persons started in training as volunter defense workers.

Nats Return Home Tonight With Browns

The St. Louis Browns, hottest club in the second division and fresh from a twin-barreled victory over the Cleveland Indians, move into Griffith Stadium tonight for the opener of a series with the Nats under the lights.

Home from a wretched Eastern trip on which they incurred a five-game losing streak in games wtih the Yankees and Red Sox, the Nats will send Early Wynn to the mound against the Browns tonight.

Wynn's presence on the mound represents a determined effort by Manager Bucky Harris to bring the Nats' losing streak to a halt. The young right-hander beat the Red Sox, 5 to 1, in his last start and along with Sid Hudson has been the Nats' only consistently good pitcher.

Clark Griffith yesterday expressed high disgust with the Nats' infield, both offensively and defensively and declared he is making strong attempts to procure new talent.

"The deadline on trades will be June 15," Griffith pointed out, "and some of the other clubs may be willing to make a deal before that time." The Nats' owner did not divulge what Washington players he considered trading material, but he made sweeping hints that he is displeased by the entire Washington infield.

Griffith said he was contemplating bringing to Washington Jim Sullivan, a shortstop who is hitting .322 with the Nats' Chattanooga farm team, but admits that Sullivan lacks experience. "He was in a Class D League last season and it may be too much to expect him to be ready for the majors."

The Nats' owner disclosed also that he has sent Second Baseman Frankie Croucher to Miami, Fla., for treatment of his sore throwing arm which has kept the player out of the lineup all season. Croucher will visit a Miami osteopath who has been recommended by the Red Sox. The doctor effected a complete cure of Pitcher Tex Hugheson's sore arm, according to Joe Cronin.

P.G.A. Champ Snead Here, But Where?

Sammy Snead, the P. G. A. champion of a day, was a Navy Department visitor yesterday but what came out of his visit to join Uncle Sam's sea-going forces was somewhat of a mystery last night.

Snead was scheduled to appear here yesterday for induction into the Navy but the branch, his rank, where he will be located, etc., was not disclosed by the Navy Department.

Several persons reported seeing Snead at induction headquarters but he could not be located. It was understood he will join the physical fitness end. An announcement may be forthcoming today.

Chicago golf officials queried local news sources yesterday as to whether Snead would be available for the Hale American Tournament June 18-21. The event is a war relief benefit tournament.

Cardinals Rout Chanute Field Nine In Exhibition, 10-3

By the Associated Press

Chanute Field, Ill., June 1.—The St. Louis Cardinals defeated Chanute Field, 10-3, today in an exhibition baseball game before 4000 soldiers and civilians.

The National Leaguers pushed across six runs in the fifth inning, starting with Ray Hayworth's long home run and continuing until Hayworth lashed out a single to drive two more runs across. Three other hits plus two walks and a hit batsman accounted for the remainder of the scoring.

Old Chicub Pitcher Dies at Chillicothe

JIMMY FOXX

Rib Injury Ends Star's Days With American League

By the Associated Press

Boston, June 1.—Jimmy Foxx, now crowding 35 but up to a year ago one of baseball's greatest right-handed sluggers today was waived out of the American League by the Boston Red Sox and sold outright to the Chicago Cubs, managed by Jimmy Wilson, his old friend and Philadelphia neighbor.

The passing of Foxx, known by fandom as "double X" and most affectionately by teammates and rival players as "the beast," came as no surprise. Baseball knew he was just about washed up with the Red Sox last season, especially after Owner Tom Yawkey, his sincere admirer, tried vainly to land him the managership of the Cleveland Indians.

Until recently, Foxx appeared destined to rejoin the Philadelphia Athletics, the major league club he broke in with 18 years ago when, fresh from a Maryland farm, he launched one of the greatest first-basing careers in modern baseball.

Mack Not Interested

But he suffered a fractured rib during batting practice in the Yankee Stadium last week, with the result that Connie Mack, his first baseball boss, lost interest in taking him in a trade that the Red Sox hoped would get them Frankie Hayes, a much-needed topflight catcher who yesterday was traded to the St. Louis Browns.

It is likely that Wilson figures Foxx, who has a lifetime batting average of .332 and a current one of .274, will provide his sixth-place National League club with some much-needed batting power, most likely in pinch hitting roles.

Foxx, who broke into professional baseball at the tender age of 14 with the Easton club in the Eastern Shore League, joined the Athletics as a catcher the following year. He was farmed out to Providence, then in the International League, but was recalled at the end of the season. He played with the Athletics from 1926 to 1935 and starred on three of their pennant winning clubs.

Tried Catching

Mack tried him out behind the plate and at third base before making him the Athletics' regular first baseman in 1929. Foxx hit his peak for the Athletics in 1932, when he batted his all-time high of .364 and hit 58 home runs, only two less than Babe Ruth's top and the major league record for a right-handed slugger.

Foxx was purchased by the Red Sox in 1935, along with Pitcher Johnny Marcum for two players and a reported $150,000. That was the last major league deal Yawkey made with Mack, into whose lap the Boston owner dropped almost a half-million in his fruitless attempt to build a pennant-winning team.

Three times during his previous 17 years in the American League, Foxx was voted its most valuable player in 1932, 1933 and 1938.

Monida Wins At Delaware, Paying $5.90

By the Associated Press

Delaware Park, June 1.—Miss C. Morabito's Monida, an eligible for Saturday's renewal of the rich Brandywine Handicap, qualified nicely for that event when she turned back four fleet opponents in the featured The Glascow Purse here today.

A distant trailer during the early stage of the 6-furlong dash Monday, found her racing legs nearing the quarter pole and gradually closed in to hit the wire two lengths to the fore of Little Miss. The latter made all the early pace and just did stick it out to beat Blue Twink a head for the place. Blue Twink raced almost head and head with Little Kiss for three-eighths of a mile, but his high weight of 117 pounds began telling in the late stages and he faltered in the closing drive.

Monida was the first favorite to score in four races and her triumph brought a large measure of joy to some 6000 fans who sat in on the program. Monida returned $5.90 straight and timed over a fast track in 1:13 4-5. Apprentice H. Shufelt had the mount on Monida and it was the lad's first riding triumph of the meeting.

Army-Penn Grid Game Shifted To Philly; Others May Follow

By the Associated Press

New York, June 1.—Gas rationing in the east and the universal restrictions on the use of tires for pleasure driving, already have made themselves felt on the coming football program.

Switching of the Army-Pennsylvania game from West Point to more populous Philadelphia today followed by less than a week the transfer of the Navy-Notre Dame contest from South Bend, Ind., to Cleveland.

H. Jamison Swarts, University of Pennsylvania athletic director, said the change was made because Philadelphia is more accessible by train and other existing transportation facilities than is West Point.

Although none of the other Eastern and Southern schools in the gas rationed area would comment on possible changes it became known that several schools had discussed the situation.

Princeton and Navy expect to play their schedules as they now stand while all the metropolitan schools contemplated no changes.

Dartmouth is planning no transfers but its athletic council will meet this week to study war-born problems.

Penn State considered moving its contest with Pittsburgh from State College, Pa., to the Smoky City but State officials decided that the change would be unfair to the Nittany Lion students who must purchase activity books. State's home schedule lists four games.

I.C. 4-A Judges See Movies, Shift Results

By the Associated Press

New York, June 1.—Changes in the placing of the finishers in the 100-yard dash and 120-yard high hurdles by the judges today after they saw motion pictures of Saturday's IC-4A meet lifted New Hampshire to second place and dropped Pittsburgh to third behind Penn State.

The judges and Referee Rupert C. Thomas of New York City decided today that second place in the sprint was won by Charles Shaw of Cornell instead of by Harold Stickel of Pittsburgh. Stickel was given fourth place with third going to Teammate William Carter.

George Gilson of Holy Cross was named winner of the high barriers and Walter Hall of Tufts, previously awarded that honor, was shunted to second.

Pitt lost a point in the reshuffling and its team total dropped from 19½ points to 18½. New Hampshire's unchanged total of 19 brought it second, Penn State won with 25½ points.

Cornell gained a point, but retained ninth place, Holy Cross moved from a tie for nineteenth to a tie for eighteenth and Tufts slumped for a tie for fifteenth to a deadlock at 16.

Nats, Yanks Play Sunday Twin Bill

Officials Worried Over Poor Showing; Three Other Relief Games Shifted

A spectacular contribution to Army-Navy Relief—a Yankee Stadium double-header on Sunday, August 23—was announced yesterday by the New York and Washington baseball clubs.

In a generous effort to make a success of the thus-far sorry relief-game program of the major leagues, the owners of the Nats and Yankees called off original plans to dedicate the single game of Saturday, August 22, to the fund, and substitute the Sunday double-header.

The twin bill was one of four Relief attractions announced yesterday by League President Will Harridge, plus a night game. St. Louis will play at Detroit and Boston at Philadelphia on the same day, both double-headers, while the Chicago-Cleveland game of July 2 will be played at night for the fund instead of the afternoon.

Officials Displeased

"We have not been pleased with the turnouts so far," said Clark Griffith yesterday, "and we don't want this program to fail. Mr. Barrow, president of the Yankees, and myself have agreed to go all out in an attempt to fill the Yankee Stadium for the Relief Fund game and feel that a Sunday double-header cannot miss."

The Nats and Yankees thus are the only two teams to give up two games to the Army-Navy fund, and the only clubs to turn over a Sunday date to the relief program.

"The Washington team is in New York for games on Friday, Saturday and Sunday late in August, and the Sunday double-header which we have created by making up a rained-out game earlier in the season, will probably affect our Friday and Saturday crowds, but we are very willing that it will be that way," said Griffith.

The American League has been smarting at the embarrassment of the Relief Game program thus far, with four American League games netting less than $45,000 to the fund, in contrast to the $80,000 turned over to Army-Navy relief by the one game held in the Brooklyn National League Park.

Vision Gate of $100,000

The Washington-Yankee double-header on a Sunfay is expected to top Brooklyn's $60,000 contribution by many thousands of dollars, and a gate of $100,000 is visioned by baseball men.

"We are not going to rest at merely providing a Sunday double-header attraction for the fund," said Griffith. "In New York, Mr. Barrow will make a drive to sell out the park and I will not be surprised if more tickets than the capacity of the park will be sold."

One hundred per cent of every ticket sold for the games will go to the Army-Navy Relief fund, with players, umpires, club owners and newspapermen paying their way into the park. The sum the double-header will raise is expected to give the American League a wide edge over the National League in contributions to the fund, due to the 70,000 capacity of Yankee Stadium.

Sec. Morgenthau Smiles on Racing For Public Morale

"People have got to have a little fun."

This was the answer of Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau today when asked whether it was right for thousands of people to turn out at horseraces at a time when he was trying to raise money through the sale of war bonds to finance the war effort."

"Besides," he added, "the Government collects a 10 per cent tax on such amusements."

$11.40 Shot Beats Out Spectator

By Walter Haight
Post Staff Correspondent.

Charles Town, W. Va., June 1.—In the closest finish of the meeting and the tightest three-horse ending this writer has seen this year on any track, W. M. Beougher's Royal Echo won the Front Royal Purse, featuring the Monday program here. G. D. McCleary's Spectator was judged second with J. B. Royson's Glitter Girl placed third.

It was one finish in which few if any among customers, officials or writers had a definite opinion. The three horses went into the wire as one and it looked like a three-way dead heat from the press box.

Royal Echo paid $11.40 in winning her second purse of the meeting. She was clocked in 1:15, only two-fifths of a second over the track record for the "Charles Town Course" of 120 feet more than 6 furlongs. Jockey Herb Claggett turned in a brilliant, well-judged ride on the 4-year-old daughter of Prince of Wales and Brighter Echo.

With the exception of the stretch run, when Royal Echo joined the struggle, the front-running was a head and head battle between Glitter Girl and Spectator. The pair forged to the front of their rivals going to the first turn. Royal Echo, fractious at the post, lacked early speed. Along the backstretch, Claggett moved her to serious contention and in the stretch he went to the whip. For the final 30 yards it was anybody's race at least any of the fighting trio.

Jockey Eddie Smith, Washington rider, miraculously escaped injury in a spill that came soon after the start of the third race. He was aboard Sampler, the favorite in the field of eight, and the horse tripped and threw him. He arose under his own power, however, and suffered only a sprained thumb and continued to ride during the program.

Jockey Sammy Palumbo, who rode three winners on the day's card, was aboard Mrs. J. B. Bond's Most Alert and went on to win with the third. The Canter 3-year-old put the finishing touches on a $24.80 pay-off in the daily double. The first half of the twin wager was won by Jockey Glenn Smith aboard J. E. Emmons' Remolee.

Selections at Charles Town.

Dear Al: The condition of Jockey Denny Scocca, Washington boy who was injured in a spill here last Saturday, was reported to be fair last night. He is suffering from shock as well as a small fracture of the lower jaw and mouth lacerations. Jockey Sammy Palumbo, who has been riding, but hasn't reached his usual heights hereabouts, is showing signs of life. His riding in the past few days has been of high order. Trainer Earl Auld's father passed away last week at Richmond, Va. The Washington conditioner returns to the track today. Trainer T. J. Martel left for New York in search of new racing material and plans a stopover at Delaware Park before returning here. Ky Aldridge of the Washington Redskins football squad was a visitor. John Pons was an arrival from Columbus, Ohio, where he served in an official capacity, and has joined the official staff here. For failing to appear in the paddock here on Saturday to saddle Golden Dial in the third race, Trainer E. D. Taylor was fined $10 by the stewards. Jockey S. Alexander departed for Delaware Park, where he will join forces with Sydney Boniface, who is handling the horses of E. C. Hackney. Former Jockey Jimmy Feltner was inducted into the Army on Saturday and is quartered at Camp Lee, Va. Ole Olsen has succeeded A. S. Bowman as trainer of the horses owned by M. R. Waugh, Miss B. Faulconer, J. C. Colvin and the horses that race for his wife. Frank Kearns is shipping the horse Good Head here from Belmont Park and has designated Anthony Cirasci as trainer. It was reported that Red Wrack, owned by Mrs. Mary Knieriems, pulled up lame in his race here Saturday. Trainer D. Scott hopes to nurse the sprinter along for a campaign later in the season. Trainer W. Le Bedin has taken over the training of Raylight, owned by J. W. Boteler. Seventy-four trainers saddled winners during the first 18 days of the current meeting, according to statistics. See you on the rail.

BILL.

First race — SATCHEL and BRIGHT AND HAPPY are a tight fit in the day's opening dash for 2-year-olds. Both have won here and I prefer them in the order named. SOME WHERE and SPY MISS have shown fair form and are possibilities.

Second race—PORTET is a doubtful starter but will be hard to beat if sent postcard. Only race here was on a heavy, holding track. LITTLE MOWLEE is getting ready to win and this could be a good spot. CAIDON for the minor money.

Third race—LENNANE has shown promise and will be a keen factor if not the winner if taken off the reserve list. REIGN SUPREME is a fair sort and belongs close. PETIT FOURS could get a piece of the pay-off.

Fourth race—PERSIAN QUEEN appears well placed in this 7-furlong test. She needs only the right handling to beat these. BOB JUNIOR is good now and belongs close. DOCTORS NURSE to take care of the others. The reserve list GRADATIM, FREDS FIRST and SILVER BEAN, three due respect if they start.

Fifth race—MR. JIM has done about everything asked hereabouts and belongs on top of this gang. PASO GRANDE and INDIAN SEA to account for the place and show awards.

Sixth race—MALVOIS is the best bet of the day. Gets in with a feather assignment and should not make any mistakes. CENTERVILLE has punch and will be in the thick of contention. OKLAHOMA may surprise in this company.

Seventh race—PEP TALK can whip this kind when the checks are down. IVA MAE won recently in convincing fashion and belongs close. BURNER is dangerous off local racing.

Eighth race—WORTHOWNING runs honest races, and gets my call in this distance test. TYR is good now and deserves attention. IDLE NIGHT may improve enough off that last to be a threat.

Substitute race—If this event is used, I'll take PANDORAMINT, LIKELY LAD and READY ABOUT.

Civilians Get Bids to Navy's 'Phys-Ed' Class

By the Associated Press

The Navy has invited civilian coaches, athletic directors and physical training instructors of many schools and colleges to attend two-week physical fitness courses starting August 3 at its four new preflight training schools to get a line on how to adapt the civilian athletic curricula to wartime needs.

"Under the invitation program," the Navy said, "athletic leaders from high schools and colleges are expected to launch a nation-wide program, which, through stress on physical development, will train a new generation to assume positions of leadership and responsibility in the armed forces."

The four preflight toughening centers are at the University of North Carolina, University of Georgia, University of Iowa and St. Mary's College in California.

Occupation Scores At Lincoln Fields

Chicago, June 1 (AP).—John Marsch's Occupation led a band of 2-year-olds to the wire in the fifth race at Lincoln Fields today to win the 5-furlong dash, a preview of the Joliet Stakes.

The $5000 added Joliet Stakes for juveniles is the track's first big event for 2-year-olds this season and will be Saturday's feature.

The Marsch colt ran the 5 furlongs in 1:02 2-5 to beat Mrs. Monte Weil's Fire Engine by two lengths and one-quarter, while Murlogg Farm's Take Away ran in the third slat two lengths behind Fire Engine.

Occupation, the favorite, paid $3.40 to win. He was ridden by Art Craig.

Market Nine Scores, 8 to 4, Over Mellanos

Center Market nine, leading contender for The Washington Post-Industrial League sandlot title, scored all its runs in the first three innings to down Mellanos Cafe, 8-4, in a seven-inning league game yesterday.

Bill Helmer, the winners' moundsman, gave up seven hits and was well supported by his teammates in the field. At bat the Marketmen managed for only six safeties off Porter, but made three of them good for extra bases.

Today the perennial rivals of the league, Cameo and Heurich, come to grips on the West Ellipse at 5:30. The former is undefeated to date and holds one decision over the defending champions already this season.

Everett Johnson to Compete In Middle Atlantic Amateur

Everett Johnson, who won the last renewal of the Manor Club Invitation tournament six years ago in one of the major upsets of District Invitation tournament play, is returning to what must be his favorite course for a crack at the Middle Atlantic championship.

Johnson and Bert Bowie of Columbia were post entries yesterday, making a starting field of 62 for the thirty-eighth annual championship, oldest amateur affair in this section. Johnson, a member of Prince Georges, upset Russ Hollebaugh for the Manor title in 1937.

The senior's division of the Middle Atlantic championship will get under way with a qualifying round for the 50 years and up members, to be followed by one match a day through Friday's finals. The competition among the veteran golfers is keen with Fay Ingalls, defending champion from Hot Springs, Va., entered along with W. J. Peters, medalist and runner-up last year who this time will be on his home course. A former Middle Atlantic Amateur champion, Walter R. Tuckerman, the 1907 titlist and still an occasional par shooter, also is entered.

Course Open for Practice

The course will be open for practice rounds today for the championship contestants who will play 18-hole medal rounds tomorrow to decide the places in the various flights and then will play match rounds Thursday and Friday, two a day through the finals Friday afternoon.

The field is an exceptionally good one and exceeds the entry list of the past two years when the tournament was somewhat of a disappointment at Hillendale in Baltimore and at Hot Springs, Va.

Some of the par-busting youngsters are missing but the list is dotted with middle and high 70-shooters and a lively scrap is in prospect for the 16 coveted berths in the championship flight.

Post entries will be accepted until tomorrow noon at Manor. Greens Committee Chairman Ralph P. Gibson and Greenskeeper Ernest Parsley have the course in excellent condition and the outstanding event of the year for the simon-pures is in prospect, given a break by the weatherman.

Houghton Wins Sweepstakes At Baltimore

Special Dispatch to The Post

Baltimore, June 1.—Al Houghton, the president and professional of Prince Georges Country Club, who led the District professionals in money and tournament winnings for the past two seasons, won his first event of the 1942 links campaign yesterday at the Country Club of Maryland.

Houghton played the par 70 layout in 72 strokes, to lead a field of ten professionals in the sweepstakes competition, beating Congressional's Wiffy Cox by just one shot. The latter had 73.

Cox and Maury Fitzgerald of Kenwood posted a best ball 67 to tie for first in the pro-amateur play with the Baltimore C. C. Pro Jim Flattery and Jim Jones of the host club. Houghton and his partner, Jess Baggett, tied for second with 68s, with Andy Gibson, Bonnie View pro, and Dr. Newman.

Baltimoreans won gross and net honors in the amateur sweepstakes play, Marshall Neel, of the host club, posting the lowest score, a 74, and Jim Jones winning net with 84-8, 66. Two other Washington professionals competed, George Diffenbaugh, Kenwood, was out of the money with a 75, and Tommy Doerer, jr., of Bradley Hills had an 81.

Lulu Costantino Beats Puentos in New York

New York, June 1 (AP).—Charles (Lulu) Constantino, 128½, New York No. 1 featherweight contender, outpointed Guillermo Puentos, 123¾, Colombia, South America, in eight rounds at St. Nicholas Palace tonight.

Vikings And Tech Bow In Last League Games

Central Stadium will be the scene of opening hostilities in the 1942 interhigh baseball playoff tomorrow, it was decided in a meeting of school officials yesterday. Starting time will be 4 p. m., with Central and Woodrow Wilson nines the principals. The second clash will be staged at Wilson's park, and if a third game is necessary it will be played at either Griffith Stadium or Tech Stadium.

Though neither made any difference in the championship playoff foes, two games yesterday officially wound up the regular public school season. Central's title contenders lost caste with a 9-8 beating by Coolidge, which was winning its first game in seven starts. Roosevelt nosed out Tech, 6-5, to earn a tie with Western for third place.

Riders Win Wild One

Both Roosevelt and Tech put on terrific rallies in the final inning of their game at the latter's field, the Riders finally winning with a 4-run spree. Tech, however, pushed home 3 runs in the last half of the ninth after two were out, and was beaten only when Substitute Infielder Jack Ray popped to centerfield with the bases loaded.

Billy Garner, Rider southpaw, had hurled 2-hit ball until that ninth inning. Then Tech bunched three singles, by Bradley, Webb and Brewer, which combined with 2 errors and a walk to nearly knot the count.

Though he was touched for 9 hits over the route, Tech's Sammy Webb was in no serious trouble until the ninth. Then a succession of attempted sacrifices which went for hits accounted for the Riders' winning margin. Garner himself started the parade, and his infield hit was duplicated by Howard, Robertson and Tomasula. Inserted in that record was Marvin Gelles' thumping triple to right.

Coolidge Coasts In

Taking a 7-0 lead in the first four innings, Coolidge forced Central to try and catch up. The Vikings came back strong, but not quite strong enough.

In the end it was Pitcher Lafferty, who has hurled only three innings this season, who stopped the Viking's rally against his mate, Hanson. Between the pair Central collected 9 hits while Coolidge was held to 8 by Dave Wilkerson, who pitched 2 2-3 innings, and Harry Wolfe.

After Dale Martin, outfielder, had launched the Colts' scoring with a home run in the first inning, they went to work in earnest for six more runs in the fourth. Capping that display was Clem Battista's three-run homer to left. What proved the winning run was brought home in the sixth by Martin when he walked and moved around the bases on two passed balls and Battista's infield out.

May Pork Output Sets Record for Month

Chicago, June 1 (AP).—Pork production in May was the largest on record for the month, the American Meat Institute said today in a review of livestock markets. Output of other classes of meat was about the same as in May, 1941.

The Institute estimated pork production as 5 to 10 per cent greater than in April, 1942, and up 10 to 15 per cent above May, 1941.

With the exception of hogs, livestock marketings were placed at about the same level as last May. The institute said that hog marketings were estimated to have been substantially larger than last year.

Wholesale prices of beef declined slightly during May, while lamb quotations advanced. Fresh pork and veal remained unchanged at ceilings.

The Outlook

Business Pools Found Necessary to War Effort; Guarantees Asked Against Anti-Trust Suits

The pool—a bad name to trustbusters—has become a major legal tool of the war effort at home. The pattern of pooling the resources of rival business firms has spread through much of American trade as the necessities of war have borne down on the luxury of old-fashioned competition.

Despite the antitrust laws, the Administration has created a system through which almost any kind of business combination necessary to the war effort can be established.

In general, the only restrictions on pooling—once it has been certified as necessary by a war agency—are these:

(1) Its effects must be limited to war business, or purposes related to the war; (2) Wherever possible, opportunity must be given all interested firms either to enter the pool or to stay out; (3) The objectives for which the pool is formed must be carried out in good faith.

Here are some of the ways in which pools are used today:

War productions associations—To make full use of small industry, the WPB has encouraged the joining togther of plants to seek joint war contracts. A string of companies, each capable of making some part of a total war order, together may fill prime war contracts.

Warehousing associations—In big cities the office of defense transportation has urged the warehousemen to organize an association to pool their space, so that a Government agency can make a single contract for a large block of space. The job is parceled out among the warehouses by the association.

Delivery pools—To save tires, gas and trucks, local merchants, dairies and others are urged to agree on limiting deliveries, or even throwing all delivery trucks into a common service.

Even the little guy with his old jaiopy has been asked to pool cars with his neghbors, swapping rides to work and back. In some places this violates the State law.

Industry committees—The war production job sometimes requires that entire industries work together as a unit. Industry advisory committees set up within WPB have had to request certain action from every member of an industry.

Although anyone is free to use certain business practices approved by war agencies, a system is provided for clearing all pooling agreements and contracts through the antitrust division of the Justice Department.

Between the war agencies and the lawyers, they have tried to comb out of such agreements any practice tending to create monopoly or to squeeze out competitors.

Thus, lawyers say they would prefer a plan devised to save 70,000 miles of rubber a week and also to avoid any danger of a squeeze play ot a plan which saved 100,000 miles of rubber at the risk of setting up a monopoly.

A delivery pool which attempted to split up a city into exclusive "territories," assigning one zone to each subscribing business house, would be rejected as eliminating competition.

Neither in delivery pools, warehouse pools of war production pools can membership be refused any eligible firm without good reason.

This bid for business cooperation in the war effort has brought bitter memories of the Medison, Wis., oil case to the minds of some business men, and they have called for guarantees that prosecution as antitrust violators will not be the reward for their trouble.

Justice lawyers have argued, on the other hand, that under their system of clearance for such wartime pools any group could get the Attorney General's aproval or necessary collaboration, and that no one abiding by the documents need fear prosecution, either now or later.

The present Attorney General, Francis Biddle, has ollowed the policy laid down a year ago by the now Justice Robert H. Jackson that acts performed in good faith and within the fair intent of war agency requests would not be prosecuted.

At present two bills are pending in Congress which would carry this process one step further. One proposal would take the matter out of the Attorney General's hands for the duration. They provide, in general, that nothing in the antitrust laws shall be deemed to prevent a businessman or group of businessmen from engaging in any activity which has been found by the WPB to be in the interests of the war effort.

April Income Sets New High

By the Associated Press

National income climbed to a record $8,784,000,000 in April, the Commerce Department reported yesterday.

This total of all wages, salaries, dividend payments and other forms of income payment, considered in the light of seasonal factors, would mean an annual national income of 109 billion dollars. Last year's total was $92,100,000,000.

The April total was only slightly higher than March, but represented a significant advance, the department said, in view of seasonal differences between the two months.

In another report the Commerce Department said that exports, including lend-lease shipments, mounted to a record $681,979,000 in April. This was an increase of about 73 million dollars over March. Imports, however, declined about 53 million dollars to $238,122,000 during April.

For the first four months of the year, exports totaled $2,265,560,000 and imports $1,,014,100,000. In the similar period of last year, exports aggregated $1,371,785,000 and imports $1,017,637,000.

Under wartime restrictions, no indication of the types of goods sent abroad or their destinations was available.

WPB Orders Office Machine Output Slash

By the Associated Press

The Government yesterday ordered a deep slash in the production of office machinery, giving part of the industry only six months more of life, and set up a distribution system to assure that only essential users get the remaining output.

The order was of an unusual type, intended to build up a stock pile to care for all estimated Government and essential business requirements "until June 30, 1944." Previous orders, which were revoked, had governed the distribution of office machinery but put no curb on production.

The War Production Board action followed by a few hours an order prohibiting the manufacture of nonessential cutlery—pen knives, domestic carving sets, manicure items, and novelties—and curtailing the manufacture of other types of cutlery, to conserve iron and steel.

The office machinery order was designed to "hasten conversion of the industry to 100 per cent war work," WPB said. Producers in the field already hold war contracts totaling more than three million dollars.

Six months of production on a curtailed basis, were allowed for adding machines, dictating and shorthand writing machines, and several other types. For a second class of machines—accounting and bookkeeping, addressing and billing machines, and the like—output on a curtailed basis was permitted for the next seven months, with no provision set forth for production thereafter.

Producers and dealers were prohibited from filling back orders for new machinery, except for the Army and Navy. On future orders, WPB will authorize deliveries to the Army, Navy or Maritime Commission, probably on an allocation basis. All other deliveries will be limited to orders bearing a preference rating of A-9 or higher, issued on or after today.

Cutlery Output Limited

The War Production Board yesterday prohibited manufacture of household carving sets, penknives and most manicure implements, and sharply restricted the production of household cutlery.

The order, affecting 80 companies with normal annual business of 60 million dollars, was made effective today. It is expected to save 6000 tons of iron and steel annually 600 tons of copper alloy and quantities of other metals, rubber and plastics.

The curbs do not apply to sterling silver flatware and do not affect the use of unalloyed gold and silver in other articles.

Cutlery was divided into four classes by the WPB in order of essentiality. Output of the industrial food processing implements and machinery was permitted at the same rate as in the year ended June 20, 1941. Less essential articles were ordered curtailed in varying degrees, ranging down to nonessential cutlery, which was forbidden after June 30, except for such negligible amounts as might be made from pure gold or silver.

No Priorities for Grates

Home owners converting their heating plants from oil to coal may obtain furnace grates without priority ratings, the Office of Price Administration announced yesterday.

A new OPA order supersedes previous regulations which required a priority rating of 10 or better for the purchase of grates valued at more than $5.

Styrene Use Allocated

Styrene, a basic raw material of synthetic rubber, was placed under complete allocation control today, to insure adequate deliveries to synthetic rubber plants.

Benzene was placed by the War Production Board under identical control. In addition its use as a motor fuel, either pure or in mixture, was prohibited.

Chlorate Chemicals Restricted

Also, the WPB yesterday placed all chlorate chemicals under full allocation control. The chemicals normally are used for making matches, explosives, weed killers and rust preventives.

The WPB will specify which chlorates a producer might manufacture and dictate the final use of chlorates produced. After today, no producer or distributor may deliver the chemicals except upon specific authorization of the WPB, except in quantities of 10 pounds or less in any one month.

Restrictions on the use of duck and goose feathers for civilian purposes were amended by WPB to require that all such feathers up to four inches long must be reserved for military use. Feathers more than four inches may be used to make civilian pillows and upholstery stuffing.

Early Rally in Stocks Fades Before Close; Sentiment Chilled by Weakness in Staples

New York, June 1.—The stock market today started the new month with a modest war rally which, however, failed to hold in many instances at the finish. The big weekend air smash at Cologne aroused some bullishness at the opening on the idea that it might be the beginning of an all-out drive at the Nazis that possibly could shorten the world conflict.

Gains ran to a point or so for numerous leaders in the first hour but volume slackened and prices began to falter after midday. Rails lacked stamina and steels converted initial plus signs into small losses at the closbe. While minor fractional improvement was well distributed, declines were plentiful.

The Associated Press average of 60 stocks was unchanged at 34.6. Some buying timidity was attributed to the fact that this composite was up about 2 points in May and analysts suggested the list might be due for a technical rest.

Transfers tototaled 308,830 shares compared with 353,900 last Friday.

There was nothing much of a stimulating nature on the home front, either in the way of tax prospects or business optimism, to spur speculative or investment participation to any appreciable extent, brokers said.

Sentiment was chilled a bit by the softening of major commodities. This was blamed partly on authorization of Federal departments to purchase war materials abroad which would be admitted to the United States duty free.

Among stocks Chrysler and Montgomery Ward went into new hgih ground for the year but ended under their best quotations. Allied Chemical and Dow Chemical were ahead about a point each on restricted volume.

Lesser gainers included General Motors, Sears Roebuck, American Airlines, Douglas Aircraft, Westinghouse, American Can, Anaconda, U. S. Rubber, du Pont and U. F. Gypsum.

On the losing end were Santa Fe, Southern Pacific, Southern Railway, U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, Boeing, United Aircraft, Eastman Kodak and Caterpillar Tractor.

Bonds were mixed, with rails weakening. At Chicago wheat was off 2¼ to 2¾ cents a bushel, corn down ¾ to 1⅞ and hogs steady. Cotton dropped 90 cents to $1.05 a bale.

On the upside in the Curb were American Cyanamid, Aluminum of America, Northern States Power "A," Singer Mfg. and Phoenix Securities. Creole Petroleum slipped, along with Pantepec, Sunray Oil and Pioneer Gold. Turnover here aggregated 47,210 shares versus 42,880 in the previous full session.

Steel Employment At Record 654,000

New York, June 1 (AP).—Steel industry employment set a new record in April at 654,000 workers, the American Iron and Steel Institute reported today. The previous peak was 653,000 in March. In April of 1941, the total was 621,000.

Payrolls also increased sharply to $118,568,000 in April compared with $116,998,000 in March and $108,557,000 in April a year ago.

Wage-earning employes earned an average of 100.4 cents an hour in April working 39.7 hours a week, compared with 100.1 cents and 38.1 hours in March, and 97.4 cents and 39.4 hours in April, 1941.

Driver-Salesmen In Rural Areas Must Cut Mileage

Driver-salesmen whose routes take them outside the local delivery areas established by the Office of Defense Transpostation yesterday were brought under the local-delivery service classification.

In effect, the revision means that driver-salesmen delivering bread, groceries, ice cream, tobacco and similiar commodities must conserve tires and vehicles by cutting their delivery mileage by 25 per cent, effective at once, compared with the same month of 1941.

They are removed from the restrictions on over-the-road operators, which would have required them, effective July 2, to carry a 75 per cent capacity load on their return trips, in common with highway carriers.

The ODT on May 28 defined the local delivery area as extending 25 miles beyond the corporate limits of the municipality in which a delivery originates.

Bank Loans Drop 56 Million in Week

By the Associated Press

Commercial, industrial and agricultural loans of banks continued to decline last week.

The Federal Reserve Board said that in 101 cities these loans declined 56 million dollars to a total of $6,567,000,000.

After more than a year of steady increases, they have been declining for several weeks.

Principal declines in the week ended May 27 were 14 million dollars in New York City, ten million dollars in the Chicago Federal Reserve district and nine million dollars in the San Francisco district.

April Farm Income Up

Cash income from farm marketings in April totaled 973 million dollars compared with 901 million dollars in March and 665 million dollars in April of last year, the Agriculture Department reported yesterday.

War Damage Insurance May Start July 1

By the Associated Press

New York, June 1.—Plans are nearly completed for offering comprehensive war damage insurance on homes and other types of properties in the United States, it was said in insurance circles today.

The insuror will be the War Damage Corporation, a subsidiary of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, but the selling, service and claim adjustment machinery of the private companies will be utilized, it was said.

While the final text of the policies to be offered has not yet been completed, it was said, it is hoped that the new protection can be offered by July 1.

All property in the United States is covered against war damage without cost at present by a temporary war damage corporation, which will be succeeded by the billion-dollar corporation of the same name shortly. The present corporation has a capitalization of 100 billion dollars.

Rates for the new insurance, it was said, will range from 10 cents a year for each $100 valuation on homes and their contents and farms and outbuildings, to as high as 30 cents per $100 for some types of industrial and public utility properties.

Steel Production To Dip This Week

New York, June 1 (AP).—The American Iron and Steel Institute estimated today the Nation's steel mills would operate at 99.3 per cent of capacity this week, off .3 of 1 per cent from the record levels of a week ago.

Such a rate would indicate an output of 1,686,700 net tons of ingots. A week ago operations were at 99.6 per cent, indicating a production of 1,691,900 tons; a month ago the rate was 98.6 per cent and a year ago 99.2 per cent of a slightly smaller capacity rating.

Grin and Bear It

By Lichty

"All this noise is sure a relief after working as a secretary and listening to the boss tell all about his golf!"

Listen! with Glynn

James Waters and Al Shebel are two men with a million dollar idea.

Their CBS program, "Are You a Missing Heir?" which you hear over WJSV every Tuesday night has recovered for rightful owners more than $1,000,000 in unclaimed estates which were lying unnoted in court files throughout the country.

And as time goes on, many more thousands of dollars will be put into the hands of unsuspecting inheritors. It is estimated that upwards of 162 million dollars rests in probate courts of the United States waiting for heirs to claim it.

This million dollar idea had its first flowering when Waters, graduate of a law school, went to work for a probate attorney. After poking into musty files and kicking around in the legal library of unsettled estates, he found a great delinquency in will-making. In 70 per cent of the unclaimed estates no wills had been made. By State laws, unwilled property descends first to surviving husbands or wives; next to children, then to brothers and sisters, aunts, uncles and first cousins. Waters decided that the heirs were missing because they were unaware the law was ready to pass on them the estates of relatives they had known only casually or not at all.

With the aid of his friend, Al Shebel, Waters built the idea into the "Mising Heirs" program, which dramatizes the facts around unclaimed estates in the hope of finding their owners.

Thus from dusty files came an idea that made a career for two young fellows—two young fellows who are now starting in on the second million.

Contract Bridge

This question concerns your play of today's hand at a six-heart contract. You are South, and West's opening lead is the club king. How do you develop the hand so as to make six-odd? The solution follows:

Today's Hand

Neither Side Vulnerable
SOUTH DEALER

♠ Q J 8 5
♡ K 10 6 6
◇ 5 3 2
♣ A 7

♠ 10 7 4 — ♠ 9 3 2
♡ 7 2 — ♡ 8 3
◇ K J 4 — ◇ 10 9 8 7
♣ K Q 10 6 5 — ♣ 9 8 3 2

SOUTH

♠ A K 6
♡ A Q J 9 4
◇ A Q 6
♣ J 4

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	2 ♣	3 ♡	Pass
4 NT	Pass	5 ◇	Pass
5 NT	Pass	6 ◇	Pass
6 ♡	Pass	Pass	Pass

The Solution

South wins his small slam by developing a strip and end play on West. He wins the club lead with dummy's ace and sees that he only has eleven sure tricks: four spades, five trumps and the two minor-suit aces. If the diamond finesse holds he has the needed trick; but as the bidding indicates West probably has the king, it is wiser to attempt to force a diamond lead from West.

After winning the first trick, declarer draws the adverse trumps in two rounds and eliminates the spade suit by cashing the four top honors. The vital point of the hand is South's discard on the fourth spade lead from the board. He must throw off a small diamond, not the club jack, as the club is needed to put West into the lead.

After discarding the diamond, declarer plays a club to the jack, and West has to win the trick. He then must choose a diamond, or club return. If he chooses a diamond, declarer makes both the ace and queen. If a club is continued, South ruffs on the board and discards the diamond queen from his hand. In either case, he takes 12 tricks, giving up one club trick. If declarer discards a club on the fourth spade, he avoids losing a club trick but must give up two diamonds.
